High Lobster Birth Rate Is Ineffective

LOS ANGELES - (P) - A lobster hatches broods up to 50,000 at a time, but fish get most of the babies before they grow up. This is the conclusion of Robert Lindberg, zoologist of the University of California. He has made a survey of Pacific lobsters for the California Fish and Game commisifornia Fish and Game commission.

Lindberg says mamma and pappa lobster don't stay together much. The male leaves a deposit on the female shell and then goes off by himself. Months later the female breaks open the deposit and fertilizes her eggs. As soon as the eggs hatch she too goes away and leaves the little ones to their fate. They usually wind up inside a fish.
