More for Your Money 2 New Paints Now on Market, One for Frosting Glass, and for Wood Finishes

By Sue Gardner

Two new paints, one for frosting glass, and the other for giving a handbrued finish to furniture, have just come on the market.

The first paint can be put on glass doors and on windows for a finish to allow the light to penetrate, yet will exclude any views you do not want from your windows, while reducing glare and affording privacy. The frosting is ready to use out of the can, and once dry, can be washed easily. The effect is one of a good ground glass frosted window. You clean the glass and then brush on the frosting paint using a small pad of cheese cloth to give a mottled surface. The paint can also be sprayed on the glass. The paint has been developed to withstand extreme variations in temperature.

The other new paint gives a hand rubbed finish to furniture and woodwork without rubbing. Only one coat is needed for painted surfaces, two for unfinished pine, gum or poplar woods. The paint dries in two hours, leaving a satiny lustre, free of brush marks. The new coating will resist not only general rough wear, but also grease, grime, moisture and alcohol—making it a good finish for cocktail tables.

You will find the new paint a good one to use in the kitchen and bathroom where it can be used on rough surfaces, since it will hide slight defects and cracks. Smudges and scuff marks can be washed off easily. For refinishing old varnished surfaces, a clear type of the new paint is available.
