

Proof that the sun does shine in Oregon. Look with longing on this summer trout fishing scene on the Nestucca.

By Don Harger

The tentative regulations on angling for the coming year would lineup of 6-1 Larry Baggett and give us until the 11th of March to wind up our steelheading. This seems like a good idea as some of the coastal anglers have, for a long time insisted that there is a separate run of the big steelhead that do not come into some of the coastal streams until March.

Whether the run is a separate strain of fish or not is something else again. It may be that they are akin to the salmon in some of their habits. In the Pacific tribe there are always a few stragglers that come in late and who use the lower river spawning beds. Witness the silvers that have been taken from the Nestucca. Salmon and other coastal streams as late as Christmas. These fish were bright and had not yet spawned. Could be that some of the big steelhead do not come in until the last minute. This might account for the fact that they are seldom taken in March on the Nestucca river above the confluence of Farmer creek. Most of the big sea-run rainbows are taken around the Three rivers area. They are really the big ones too, with many of them hitting the

Sitting Around Brings Back Memories

While we are talking (not for print) about the rain and the wind let's try to forget it for a time and think of the pleasant days the summer has to offer. After all, if we can't go fishing we might as well think about it, and we might just as well think about the good old

Nothing like letting our thoughts wander on these long rainy evenings. We remember a summer of a number of years ago when a vacation was planned. As a lad of 14 we had hiked into one of the isolated mountain lakes of the Sierra Nevada. Of course at the age of 14 the going was not so tough. At least we did not remember it as having been so tough when our ever loving wife was informthat we would hike in and spend a week. "Only a few miles," we
