

Negotiations On Vet Colony Lease Started

Negotiations for renewing the lease of the Salem veterans housing colony in southeast Salem are underway this week. The 170-unit development near 16th and Cross streets is operated by the Salem Housing authority, created by a city ordinance about five years ago. The 41 buildings, which make up the public low-cost housing colony, are located on land owned by Leo Childs and Duane Gibson. The housing authority's lease with the site owners expired March 20. Negotiations are now underway to renew that lease. A tentative plan which is being worked out calls for renewal of the lease for the next two years with option for one-year renewals after that for the following three years.

Under the agreement which expired last month the site had been leased for $2,100 per year. Rentals collected however make the development more than self-supporting. The colony was opened July 23, 1946, as a city-federal project to alleviate the then-desperate housing shortage for veterans of World War II.

William J. Braun is chairman of the housing authority. Other members include Elmer Amundson, Arthur Bates, Karl E. Wenger and Homer Smith, jr. The group plans an improvement program at the colony.

Expenditures For Defense Gain Support

A bill appropriating $379,200 for the purchase of civil defense equipment for Oregon cities will be introduced by the legislative joint ways and means committee, it decided at a meeting here Thursday.

The state civil defense organization, of which Jack Hayes is director, originally had requested an appropriation of $688,000, but the committee reduced that figure. Of the total appropriation $268,000 would be used for buying organizational equipment on a matched basis. Cities would contribute 25 per cent, the state 25 per cent and the federal government 50 per cent. Of the additional $111,200 earmarked for mobile support the state would contribute 50 per cent and the federal government 50 per cent.

The committee approved a bill under which the 11 western states would cooperate in providing education in specialized graduate schools. Under this plan a state having an outstanding graduate school would accept students from other states, with the home state paying part of the tuition. Committee members said this would make it possible to build up the current schools and make it unnecessary for the states to establish more graduate schools of their own.

Students from other states could come to the University of Oregon Medical school while Oregon students could go to the Washington State Veterinary school.

It requires only five states to ratify the agreement and Oregon would be the fifth.

The committee approved a $1,738,349 appropriation for the state military department, plus $200,000 for the construction of armories. The federal government would contribute $600,000 for armory construction. First of the new armories are at Baker, The Dalles and Forest Grove.

There was no opposition to a bill permitting the state board of higher education to refund approximately $7,000,000 of outstanding bonds. Board officials said operation of the bill, if approved by the legislature, would save the state a minimum of $1,200,000.

Horse, Donkey Tie Up Traffic

A horse and a donkey gave Salem police more trouble than all motor traffic combined Friday.

Patrolmen were called after a shaggy citizen saw a sorrel nag cantering up Capitol street near Market. Police said "Bulldog" Jackson, cigar-chewing ex-wrestler, had been seen on the sorrel nag a short time before.

Earlier the donkey was corralled on Brook avenue after a chase from the vicinity of Highland avenue and Portland road. Ownership of the donkey had not been determined early today.

Fire Permits Canceled as Humidity Drops

All slash burning permits so far issued by the state forestry department were canceled Friday because of a new wave of warmer, drier and windier weather which began covering Oregon. The department said no forest fires were burning yesterday.

This order was issued by Acting Forester Dwight Phipps, affecting permits under which no burning has been started. Where fires have begun, the responsibility for extinguishing or controlling the blaze is with the district warden.

Cause of the cancellation was the presence of a cold, dry mass of air advancing steadily from Canada and across Oregon.

The picture of the change was dramatized Friday morning when Portland's humidity was down to 27 per cent while Salem's was still up to 78 per cent.

New Housing Development Plans Aired

Plans to build 50 low-cost houses in southeast Salem were disclosed Friday by a Portland construction firm.

Permits for the first 10 houses, all to be located in the 2200 block of Electric avenue, were issued yesterday to Hal Construction Co. Cost was estimated at $5,800 each.

Others probably will be built on 22nd, 23rd and Ford streets in the same area, according to employees of the city engineer's office. All will be in recently subdivided New Haven addition.

The dwellings will have two bedrooms and are slated for completion this summer.

Knife, Fork Club Cancels Tuesday Night Speaker

Cancellation of the next Salem Knife and Fork club meeting, set for Tuesday night, was announced Friday by W. C. Leth, Monmouth, because of inability of the speaker to be here.
