Missionary Society's Cookbook Brings Out Favorite Recipes

By Maxine Buren
 Statesman Woman's Editor
 It seems that most women's organizations, no matter what their original object may be, finally get around to a money raising project. It's a well known fact that if you want some money for church or patriotic use, take it to the women. . . A custom in the old days among Ladies Aids and Woman's clubs was collecting favorite recipes into a cookbook, many of which remain as the chief culinary literature in homes of members or their daughters. . .

Newest acquisition to our own library is a book called "Your Neighbors' Recipes" compiled by the ladies of the Spring Valley Home Mission society and put together in mimeographed sheets. Sale of books will finance their projects. . . Not neglecting Chamber of Commerce data for the Zena community, in which the Spirit Valley Home Mission society ladies live, the foreword tells the readers that "Beautiful Spring Valley is situated on the west slope of the Eola Hills about eight miles northwest of Salem. The scene comprising the evergreen timber, dairy farms, orchards, grain fields, creeks and grazing sheep is dominated by the historical Zena church, nearly a century old, set on a hillside. The landscape is dotted with picturesque old mansions built by the pioneers and their sons at a time when prosperity and large families abounded in the land. . .

Having a very warm spot in my heart for the Eola Hills and especially that rolling land that is Polk county and from which my own "Rolling Hills Farm" is named alone would make me an immediate believer in the excellence of the recipes. . . Many of the dishes have served at meetings of the Missionary society, so a large proportion are desserts — but what woman doesn't revel in preparing party desserts or fancy breads. Picnic spice cake, cherry cake, chocolate yeast cake, jam cake are intriguing titles. . . Isabella Scott sends Pineapple or bananas may be added and any color effect obtained with colorings. Serve with whipped cream. . . Mrs. LaVerne Merrick makes her rhubarb pie with tapioca and egg yolks, using the whites for a meringue topping. Nellie Hammer makes an orange cream pie. Marjorie Washburn uses both white and brown sugar in her cherry pie. Jennie Crawford makes an interesting sounding baked seafood salad. Mrs. Jess Walling uses noodles, cheese in a beach dinner and rice a la King is a specialty of Stella Henry. Lois Crawford opens three cans to make a special casserole dish of tuna and macaroni. . . There are many other contributors and lots more interesting dishes typical of a group of good cooks who find housekeeping a good profession. . .

On Etiquette

By Roberta Lee
 Q. Should a person who holds a Ph.D. degree always be addressed as "Doctor"?
 A. The title of "Doctor" for a Ph.D. is rarely, if ever, used in social circles, unless the affair is in some way associated with the honor he has gained. However, if he uses the degree professionally, he is always "Doctor."
