Chiropodists Note U.S. Foot Health Week

This is National Foot Health week and the Oregon Association of Chiropodists, through President Dr. Earl P. Delaney of Salem, wants Oregon school children to know that someone is thinking about their feet—as well as their heads.

In observance of foot health week Dr. Delaney revealed that regular foot examination programs for school children would be instituted in several Oregon cities before the end of this year. Examinations will be made by state chiropodists association free of charge.

Dr. Delaney described the program as a measure intended to "spare children the painful foot disorders that may cause them lifelong suffering and disability." Instruction of school children in protection of their feet during play-ground and gymnasium activity will be included in the program.

Autos Collide North of Salem, Woman Hurt

Autos driven by Wilmer G. Lowery, Salem route 7, and Hannah R. Baker, Chemawa, collided Sunday morning at the intersection of the Pacific highway and Blossom drive in the Hayesville district.

No one was seriously injured in the 10:45 a.m. accident. State police said the accident occurred when Mrs. Baker, traveling north, attempted to make a left turn from the highway onto Blossom drive. Lowery was traveling south. Mrs. Lowery was taken to Salem General hospital by Salem first aid men and she was treated for a cut on the chin.

PROBLEM:

How can forests be made to produce more?

Many years from now the forest industries will not be able to depend for log supplies upon trees that grow wild. More and more we must farm forest lands—develop ways to grow new and better forest crops as rapidly as possible. The tree farm was created as part of the answer to this problem. But also important is the new science of forestry research. We invest considerable income to improve the forests. The industry's forest research men systematically study rates of tree growth under widely varying conditions. They study tree seed, forest diseases, destruction caused by animals and insects; the influences on tree growth of soil, rainfall, density of stands; and many other subjects. Result: More dependable forest resources for the future and a more dependable future for all whose lives are influenced by the forest industries. It means a more dependable supply of forest products—for peace or emergency.

ANSWER:

THIS FOREST IS TOO CROWDED, SO SMALL TREES ARE MARKED FOR HARVEST

In every forest there is a constant battle among the trees for survival. The weak die out and the strong become stronger. Weyerhaeuser foresters are trying to develop practical methods of "thinning" forest stands... harvesting selected small trees that would die anyway and using them to make poles, piling and pulp. Such thinning encourages maximum growth of remaining trees. The job is to thin scientifically on a profitable basis. This is only one of many experiments being made in the forest to learn how to grow more wood—faster.
