As for Ediger, the Dallas husky who will play in the Shrine game, he's not yet made the big decision. At least we haven't heard of it if he has. Incidentally, Wes will be the only gridder from this immediate vicinity in the big game on the Oregon All-Star roster. Others from nearby include Guard Cliff Engel of McMinnville and Guard Jeff Lay of Albany. .

Vince Got Joe His First Baseball Job

The magic baseball name DiMaggio being with us again for the Tacoma series this week brings to mind a couple of items on the now-graying Vince, elder of the famed DiMags who will be in the Tiger outfield.

Although most folks don't know it, Vince is the gent who got brother Joe his first job in professional baseball. It was back in 1932 when Vince was playing center field for San Francisco that the Seals, near the end of the season were running short of manpower.

"I've got a kid brother who can do anything. Want to take a look at him?" Vince told Seals Mgr. Jimmy Caveny, Seals boss at the time. Having nothing to lose, Caveny signed Joe but as a shortstop, not an outfielder. Shortly after that Vince injured his throwing arm and Joe took over his spot in center field. That was the last time Vince played center for the Seals, which is now quite understandable.

It wasn't but a couple of seasons later that Joe was purchased by the New York Yankees at the insistence of Scout Bill Essick. You may recall that the Yankees went on the limb at the time, for other clubs were backing away from Joe because of a knee injury he had absorbed while stepping from a taxi, of all things. But what a limb it turned out to be.

Was in Big Show 10 Years Himself

Vince subsequently made the Big Show himself as a National leaguer and was good enough to stick around for 10 seasons. Ironically, Vince's career in the majors is most remembered for the fact that one season he struck out for a record 134 times. Were his name not DiMaggio there would have been no great hullabaloo over that statistic.

Tanselli,3 Faber,m Stetter,1 Concerning Vince's ability to beat all the air out of major league parks with his tremendous swings (when he connected he could hit Spaeter,r em a mile, it should be added), the article on Dizzy Dean in the recent Reader's Digest has a portion devoted to a Dean vs. DiMaggio duel. Bartle.1 Dana,e Lew,p The story goes that the great Diz at the time was on a restricted budenforced by his wife. Consequently Dean attempted to gain added spending money by making small bets with friends. He wagered a fan that he would whiff Vince every time the latter came to bat. Dean did fan Vince the first three trips and had two strikes on him the fourth time. Then DiMaggio lofted a high, pop foul back of the plate. Fearful of losing his bet, Dean charged in yell-Branch _____ ing at his catcher, "Drop it! Drop it!" Which the catcher did, according to the story, and then Diz went on to get Vince on a third strike.

Diz' Wife Had Timely Question

DiMaggio admits that the story is correct but for one item. The foul wasn't dropped-it went into the stands. Dean did scream, and did win his bet, however.

Also included in the story are Mrs. Dean's comments on the incident. "I don't see anything so wonderful about striking out a reekie," tallied Diz' wife (occurance was in 1937 when Vince was starting out with the Boston Braves). "Why don't you bear down on his brother Joe? You never get him out," she added.

It took two seasons for Vince to get his first hit off Dean, but it was a dandy. He had told the Great Diz that when he did hit one he would slam it right back through the box. When the blow finally came it was a liner that came close to taking one of Jerome Herman's ears off as he ducked. . . .
