More Angus Cattle Entries Seen at Fair

More Aberdeen Angus cattle were exhibited in the beef showing at Oregon state fair Tuesday than in any former years. Six exhibitors competed in showing the attractive, blocky black beefsteaks on hoof.

Most of the winnings went to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ryan of Anderson, Calif. Dale West of Merrill was the only other winner in the championship division.

James C. Moran of Vernonia showed the champion bulls in the Short horns and Reed Holding of Mist the female champions in this breed.

In other open classes, a White Rock pullet, shown by Bob Wolf-rain, Portland, was the best bird in the entire show of 1,029 entries.

The Milton Newport Hatchery of Tangent had the best turkey. Champion water fowl was an old gander entered by A. F. Beardley, Albany, with L. S. Patterson of Salem displaying the English class champion fowl.

Meadowland Dairy of Portland cleaned up all championships in the Ayshire but the reserve champion female, which was won by Lockridge Ayshire farm of Rainier, Wash.

In swine judging, Sawtell & Sons of Molalla and Brentford Miller, jr., of Woodburn, divided honors with Oregon State college in the Berkshire division with the college showing both grand champions; Sawtells the junior and reserve champions on boards, and Miller the junior and reserve champion sows.

Textiles, where judging was "going on and on" because of the large number of entries, were beginning to bloom out with a number of ribbons Tuesday. Included was a red ribbon for Mrs. Leland Woodley of Silverton for her cut-work dress; scarf, a blue ribbon for Mrs. Florence Rowe of Salem on an embroidered vanity set.

Presentation of the Gold Sheep bell trophy will be made at the close of the show in the freezer showing the best pen of four lambs.

Mrs. Thompson and Mrs. David Ramsey, both of Salem, serving as clerks in the sheep show, and Leonard Huggin of British Columbia and Ronald Hogg, Salem, as judges, were moving the sheep along rapidly today.

Marcus Vetter, Woodburn, showed a yearling ram to win the championship in the Columbias and Gath Brothers of Turner won all championships in Hampshire and also showed the champion Shropshire ram.

The Riddells—Ed and James of Monmouth—showed the champion ram and ewe in the Lincoln breed.

Replicas of the statues of Rev. Jason Lee and Dr. John McLoughlin, slated to be placed in Statuary Hall in Washington, D. C., will be erected on the state capitol grounds, Dr. Burt Brown Barker, chairman of the Oregon statuary committee told Gov. Douglas McKay Tuesday.

Dr. Brown left later in the day for the east where he will complete arrangements for placing the original statues in Statuary Hall and for casting the replicas in bronze. The originals will be eight feet tall.

The statue of Lee has been finished and that of McLoughlin is nearing completion.

304 Entries in Rabbit Show

In the bunny show, increasing even as they are being judged, original entries numbered 304 rabbits at the state fair.

Frederickson's Rabbits, Salem, showed the best in regular fryers and J. W. Sample of Falls City showed first in the New Zealand white doe and litter. D. L. McAlister, Silverton, won a blue on his senior buck in the Californian breed.

Other top places in the rabbit show went to Kennedy's Rabbits, Portland, on fancy fryers and small roasters, Holly Hill Rabbits, Troutdale, medium roasters and normal white fur; W. H. Beldon, Grants Pass, on Rex furs and normal colored furs.

28 Women Over 18-3 — Ins. Fair Retirement age "with nothing to do" was no bugaboo to 28 Oregon women over 70 who entered a special needlework display class for that age limit. The group made 53 entries in 17 divisions.

Four first place winners from Salem were Mrs. F. E. Wolf, in aprons; Mrs. Sarah Hoffman, crocheted bedspread; Mrs. Rose Garrett, embroidered luncheon cloth; and Mrs. Isabella Kijlson, a crocheted tablecloth.

Mrs. F. M. Roseman, Dallas, showed the blue ribbon winning vanity set, Mrs. Ida I. Veal, Albany, the top needlepoint, Mrs. R. D. Marshall, Gervais, the best braided rug and Mrs. Lela M. Zell, Newberg, the best fine-thread crocheted table cloth. Other winners were from Eugene, Portland, and Roseburg.

'Emotional Climate' of Home Declared to Be All-Important In Warding Off Delinquency

(Editor's note: This final installment of an interview on youth delinquency problems and solutions with a former Salem woman, Barbara Compton, now on the staff of San Francisco's $4,000,000 Youth Guidance center.)

By Marguerite Wright
Staff Writer, The Statesman
The Youth Guidance center of San Francisco is more than a community's attempt to protect itself from the costly and destructive activities of delinquents; in a way it represents society's attempt to make up for the fact that there is small room in our culture for adolescents.

Compulsory education keeps teenagers in school, "even when many of them cannot profit from the type of education we inflict upon them," Barbara Compton says.

"Too much of the curriculum consists of watered-down college preparation courses, meaningless to children who have neither the ability or inclination nor mentality to go to college. There should be more opportunities for exploration in the skilled and unskilled trades."

The average high school graduate can't support himself, though he probably ought to be earning a living, she said. But he has no practical training, little idea of what he is capable of, or would like to do.

Adequate vocational education, in the unglamorous but necessary service trades, for instance, and guidance in job availability, would help a great deal to give the adolescent a sense of purpose and usefulness, Miss Compton suggested.

Universal military training is no real answer to the problem of what to do with teenagers, she said. The oddball in civilian life will likely be an oddball in the army, too; some adjust well to the "controlled environment" of the services, others don't. The army, Miss Compton feels, doesn't make men out of boys unless the mature potentialities are already present.

In the family situation, adolescence is a trying time even for normal parents and normal youngsters. In the teens, the child is torn between conflicting needs of dependence and independence, of wanting to cling to childish irresponsibility and wanting to exercise an adult's privileges of devaluating parents yet feeling the need for suitable mother-father figures. Adolescence for maladjusted children and parents is even more difficult, Miss Compton explained.

The home environment during adolescence is perhaps the most important contributory factor to delinquency. The determining factor here is not the physical environment, as was once mistakenly emphasized. It doesn't matter so

California, Idaho Folk Visit at Hubbard Homes

HUBBARD—Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Hunt and two children of Caldwell, Idaho, have been guests of his mother, Mrs. Hannah Hunt, while on a two week vacation. Hunt teaches at the College of Idaho.

Raymond Vredenburg spent the weekend with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Vredenburg. He works in San Francisco.

The Chicago Academy of Sciences, Museum of Natural History, was founded in 1857.

Broken homes, whatever the direct cause, are on the increase in these troubled times of war and insecurity and moral laxity. San Francisco juvenile officers consequently found that the trend in cases in all categories shows a more serious degree of problems, particularly in the neglect and delinquency areas. But, in his 1950 annual report, George W. Oosite, chief probation officer, pointed out that thousands of problem children have taken their places in community living with good sound adjustment.

The surprising thing, Miss Compton said, is that "no matter how lousy the parents are, children want to think of them as wonderful, want to be appreciated by them."

Falling this, unloved girls will engage in sex delinquency usually not because they are "oversexed," as popularly supposed, but because they want to be liked and cared for. To many of them, early marriage is only an escape from a
