Statesman to Start Story Of Forrestal

The true story of James Forrestal's controversial career as America's first secretary of defense is now told in "The Forrestal Diaries," a series of 22 articles which will appear in The Oregon Statesman starting Wednesday, September 26.

Forrestal's suicide on May 22, 1949, came as the direct result of occupational fatigue. The first for his country's security, amid the intra-mural feuds and red tinge of post-war Washington, exhausted James Forrestal and, finally, killed him.

Forrestal's governmental career started in 1940, when he was picked by President Franklin Roosevelt as an administration assistant. Within six weeks, Forrestal had been appointed to the newly-created post of under-secretary of the navy.

At London, in spring, 1941, Forrestal sought to establish a closer liaison with the British admiralty for working out lend-lease and naval procurement problems. He made an inspection tour of the southwest Pacific late in 1942 and was with an assault task force in the Marshall islands. Eighteen months later, he was to witness the bombardment of Kwajalein by the Pacific fleet.

Franklin Roosevelt said he chose Forrestal for his "passion for anonymity," but more and more Forrestal entered the spotlight. Upon the death of Frank Knox in May, 1944, he became secretary of the navy. He watched the Marines land at Iwo Jima in 1945; attended the atomic bomb test at Bikini in 1946; remained as secretary until he was handed the job of reorganizing the armed services in 1947.

Secretary of Defense James Forrestal lost the fight for universal military training and saw his theory that "preparation for war is the best guarantee for peace" go unheeded. He earned a reputation for his ability to reconcile opposing ideas and help people work together through compromise.

Worked for Newspapers Born on February 15, 1892, in Matteawan, N. Y., Forrestal finished high school at 16. For the next four years he reported for newspapers in New York state.

By 1912 he'd saved enough money to enroll in college—one year at Dartmouth, then to Princeton—but was unable to graduate because of lack of funds.

Forrestal saw service in the navy in 1917 as one of the earliest naval aviators (No. 154). After his discharge as a lieutenant in 1919, he entered the statistical department of W. A. Read company (which later became Dillon, Read and company) and made an outstanding record as a bond salesman. He was soon admitted to partnership in the new firm, became its president in 1938. Two years later came his call to public service from President Roosevelt.

C of C to Hear Marshall Dana

Marshall N. Dana, assistant to the president of the United States National bank and longtime Oregon Journal editor, will speak at the Monday meeting of the Salem Chamber of Commerce in the Senator hotel this noon.

In addition to a long career—from 1909 to 1951—in newspaper work, Dana has served in many public and semi-public positions including regional chairman of the PWA.

In 1947 he was a guest of the war department visiting the far east. In 1949 he spent two months visiting Israel, Germany, France, Italy and Switzerland. He also toured Alaska with the Portland Chamber of Commerce Alaska committee last year.

Civic Program To Bring Prize To VFW Post

Salem's Veterans of Foreign Wars, Marion post 661, will get an award Monday night because its members did something besides attend meetings.

In addition to its many regular duties the post has carried on a progressive community service program. This includes aiding in local civic, educational and welfare programs.

Marion post topped all other VFW posts in Oregon in the community service contest which ran from Sept. 1, 1950, to May 31, 1951. The award will be presented Monday night to the post by Department Commander W. J. Ashworth of Portland. The contest was nation-wide in scope.

Among the projects carried on by Marion post included assisting in a school children safety program. Members assisted the Salem Traffic Safety council in placing safety posters over the city.

Assisted Sheriff

Past Commander Nelson Hickok and other members of the post assisted Marion County Sheriff Deaver Young and other veterans groups in organizing a civilian defense program here.

now in the navy, spent nearly three months in recruiting workers for the defense program. The post also assisted Police Chief Clyde Warren, a past department commander of the VFW, in setting up a similar program in Salem.

The post held a Christmas party for about 140 underprivileged children. The women's auxiliary unit of the post sponsored a ham dinner to raise more than $100 for the polio fund.

Scout Expenses

Marion post sponsors three Boy Scout troops. With the assistance of the auxiliary the post paid expenses of two scouts to the national jamboree recently.

Members of the post and auxiliary make regular visits to the Veterans Administration hospital in Portland presenting patients there with candy and cigarettes and other gifts. The auxiliary unit donated 1,800 hours of service to state institutions here giving gifts of food and magazines to patients.

A public sale netted $400 for Mrs. Edna Sloan of Salem, foster mother of nine children who was severely burned in an auto accident.

Judges of the Oregon VFW contest were Gov. Douglas McKay, Mayor Dorothy McCullough Lee of Portland, and Dr. Rex Putnam of Salem, state director of education.

The Earl of Sandwich reintroduced the food item which bears his name in the 18th century, but it is believed to have been used by the ancient Romans.

Street Name Changes Cost Petitioners

Salem city officials called attention Saturday to the recently adopted requirement that petitioners for street name changes pay for the cost of advertising and recording such changes. This normally runs between $10 and $15. The city council last month decided that petitioners should "pay their own way." Several street name requests have come before the council since the Salem postoffice recently announced plans for extending house delivery into several suburban areas.

Under a 1949 state law the city council now has jurisdiction over street names within six miles of city limits.
