

Formality, Fun Feature Girls' Initiation

This week saw 39 new members initiated into the Salem High School Girls' Letter club, first in a quiet formal ceremony above, and then later in a fun and frolic initiation. The club is open to girls who have gathered a certain number of points awarded for participation in sport, social and service activities. Additional points garnered by the girls during their school years give them the honor of having their own letter sweater, white with a red letter, and with traditional arm stripes for years of service. In front of the stage above are the new members with older members back of them. Seated above at the tables (from left) are Marjorie Gundran, treasurer; Viola Wilcox, secretary; Bonny Stoller, second vice president; Jo Stelbar, first vice president; Jo Stelbar, president; and Evi Tarem, Pat Collins and Marlene Kelley, initiation team.

Initiation instructions were for the girls to wear a diaper, bib and a lemon around their necks. Here parading in a "style" parade are, (from left), Anne Tarem, Sharon Johnson and Delores Davis. Mothers and teachers on hand for the fun thought the pots and pans worn as headgear quite fetching.

A Girls' Letter club initiation is made up of more fun than hazing, taking the form of weird races and contests. These lower three photos show a cracker race in which team members run to a chair, pop a soda cracker into their mouths, chew madly, then try to whistle before cracker back. Above left, in action (from left to right) are Barbara Allen, Donna Brandt and Shirley Webster. Older members showed their athletic skill in a sack race, the photo directly above showing teamwork of Carol Kaufman (left) and Clarice Remple. More teamwork cropped up during apple eating race (lower left) when Shirley Harp dropped to floor as perch for Katherine McMeekin to vie with Pat Watson for apple on string.
