Navajos Sent To 10 Special Indian Schools

WINDOW ROCK, Ariz., Oct. 25—(AP)—Young Navajos from Arizona and New Mexico are learning to hold their own in the white man's world in 10 special schools from Oregon to Oklahoma.

This fall, 4,180 Indian children, with little or no formal education at the age of 12, are going off to learn a vocation. It'll take them five years. Forty-three are to go to the Chemawa, Ore., Indian school.

Allan G. Harper, area director of the Navajo-Hopi reservations, said the program is centered around the new Intermountain Indian school at Brigham City, Utah.

Harper pointed out that of 101 Navajos who this year finished the course at Sherman, Calif., only four returned to the reservation. The rest took jobs in California.

For the first three years the course stresses learning English. After that, the students choose and are trained in a vocation.

Harper said the program is helpful in easing the load on regular reservation schools for younger children.

Students Surplus Item in Singapore

SINGAPORE—(AP)—There are 40,000 pupils in Singapore who want to go to school next year, but the outlook for getting there is dim.

A. W. Frisby, director of education in Singapore, reported there were that many applications which would have to be turned down because there were no vacancies in the available schools.

He suggested local associations and missions might help the "unfortunate boys and girls" by setting up public schools.
