Home Nuptials On Saturday

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Dean Hagedorn on South 17th street was the setting for the wedding of Miss Donna Jean Hagedorn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Hagedorn, and Ellis Fuller of Lowell, son of Mrs. Emily Benham of Oklahoma, on Saturday afternoon, November 3.

The Rev. Wesley Turner of the Leslie Methodist church performed the 3 o'clock rites before a setting of bronze and yellow chrysanthemums and autumn leaves arranged at either side of the fireplace. Miss Ann Case lighted the tapers.

For her wedding the bride wore a forest green suit with brown accessories and carried a white Bible topped with a brown and green orchid.

Mrs. Leslie Kopichek was her sister's honor attendant and wore a beige suit with green accessories and a corsage of yellow carnations. Mr. Kopichek served as best man.

For her daughter's wedding Mrs. Hagedorn wore a black gown with pink and black accessories and a corsage of pink carnations.

A reception followed with Mrs. A. D. Wells presiding at the coffee urn and Mrs. V. L. Hagedorn of Springfield cutting the cake. Assisting were Mrs. Charles Jones, Mrs. Richard Webster, Mrs. Frank Griffin, and Mrs. Melvin Case.

After a California honeymoon the couple will be at home in Springfield.

Candy Lesson in a Nutshell

Lecturer on Sweets Tells Some Tips From Professionals to Show Audience

By Maxine Bureau
Statesman Woman's Editor

Candymaking, according to E. Remington Davenport, who is conducting a series of candy making shows under the sponsorship of The Oregon Statesman, is a science, rather than an art. If one follows the formula and barring interference by human frailties or fate, one achieves a perfect piece of goods.

Mr. Davenport is completing his three shows this afternoon at 2 o'clock. He makes fudge, discusses its variations and makes taffy which turns out, strangely enough, to be cream mints, lollipops and candy canes. Marshmallows are also made, and from a professional recipe which gives them a different consistency than the ordinary home-made ones.

One of the tricks the professional candy maker uses that's the most surprising to me is when he cooks his candy to too high a temperature he merely adds some water, sends the temperature down and brings the heat up again to the correct spot. The usual amateur either has a fit of nerves, or removes the syrup immediately and tries to continue with the recipe.

Mr. Davenport usually stirs his candy. He brings it to a boil, washes down the sides of the pan with a generous amount of water and a brush, and then stirs it, being careful not to wipe crystals from sides of pan.

WEATHER DOESN'T COUNT

Some superstitions about weather remain with the professional candymakers, but our expert scoffs. Damp or cold weather has little or no effect on the handling of candies, he says. Commercial manufacture of candy certainly is not halted with wet, cold or hot weather, he reminds us.

Though using a candy thermometer, Mr. Davenport says the old time methods of soft, hard or crack in cold water can be used successfully. You'll have a little more accurate tests however with the use of the thermometer.

Mr. Davenport is a believer in glucose. You have to count on the extra water in the cornsyrup, it's about 25 percent more than in glucose.

Mr. Davenport uses raw peanuts in his brittle, adding the nuts to the syrup and allowing them to roast in the hot candy. The flavor's grand, though raw peanuts are hard to get.

When you buy chocolate for dipping, get the best, believes the lecturer. You'll pay a little more per pound but it's easier to handle and worth the extra in flavor.

Fudge, one of the most commonly made candies, yet the hardest to make right, was his program. He always lets his fudge cool to lukewarm on a wet marble slab or heavy tray, then works it slowly with a heavy spatula or putty knife. The warmer the fudge when worked, the quicker it hardens but the more coarse the grains. Working it slowly, when almost cold produces a very smooth and creamy texture. If your fudge is too soft, Mr. Davenport warns, warm it instead of chilling it, it will cream more quickly.

Final class will be this afternoon at 2 o'clock.
