Restaurant Finds Return to 1939's Prices Profitable

By Glenn Engle
DETROIT, Nov. 24—(AP)—"Used to be like a morgue around here," said Joseph Tuzak with a wide grin and a sweeping gesture toward the loaded booths and stools in his restaurant.

He was talking about how bad business was up to Nov. 13. His "Green Feather restaurant" on Detroit's factory-studded west side is jumping now.

Why the change? Because Tuzak came up with a drastic formula in a desperate move to get himself out of the red: slash prices and raise wages to handle the extra business.

A pork chop dinner (two chops, potatoes, vegetable, bread and butter) that used to cost $1.15 is listed at $3.50 now. Chicken dinners were carved from $1.35 to $75; T-bone steaks from $2.25 to $1.25.

Tuzak says they're 1939 prices, with only a few exceptions, for the same size and quality meals as before.

In the restaurant business 15 years, Tuzak moved the "Green Feather" to its present site last January. It had been a consistent money loser from then on.

Had One Customer
On November 9—a factory payday—he had one customer in his place. He had taken in exactly 24 cents in three hours. So he began wondering whether other restaurants in the neighborhood were doing so badly.

A personal investigation disclosed a total of nine patrons in four restaurants—and 17 employees idling away their time. Yet his restaurant is near one of the busiest intersections in town (Michigan and Livernois) and people were passing by, by the hundreds, as they changed bus and street car lines. Something definitely was wrong.

Tuzak went home and dug out an 11-year-old menu. After debating the move for several days he called a sign painter to post similar prices on his window. The word spread and people began flocking there, at first mostly out of curiosity.

Hamburgers 18 Cents
Then their motive changed to economy when they found they could get hamburgers for 18 cents instead of 30; coffee for six cents instead of ten; sweet rolls for five cents instead of 12; ham and eggs or 45 cents instead of 80.

Thanksgiving dinners — liberal portions of turkey, dressing, cranberry sauce, potatoes, vegetable, bread and butter — went for 75 cents. Soup, coffee and dessert could be added with the total check still under a dollar.

The only exceptions to 1939 prices, said Tuzak, are milk, coffee and pie. He said half pint bottles of milk which sold for a nickel then now cost him six cents, so he charges eight. And the cups of coffee and the cuts of pie are larger than they used to be.

Business Rises
Tuzak's gross business shot up from less than $500 the week before November 13 to $3,600 the week after; number of customers rose from 50 to 60 to 1,000 a day; number of employees from five to 18. He raised wages two or three dollars a week to compensate employees for extra work in handling the new-found business.

Instead of losing $100 or so a week, as he had been doing, he made a net of $500 the first seven days under the new price schedule. The last few days have been even better, he said.

Tuzak said dozens of other restaurant owners have come to the Green Feather to see how it's done. A couple of them already have told him, he said, that they plan to follow suit.

Tuzak hopes they do. "It's a good thing," he said. "I hope it spreads all over town. The restaurant business needs something to revive it."

GARY, Ind., Nov. 24—(AP)—Mrs. Amos Brewster frantically telephoned police yesterday to "come quick — a snake is coiled on a table near the baby's crib."

Patrolmen Andrew Baill and William Kennedy, jr. could see the outline of the snake from the doorway of a party darkened room.

While Kennedy pointed a gun toward the snake, afraid he would cause it to strike if he fired and missed, Ball rushed in, grabbed the baby and ran out.

With the baby safe, Ball drew his gun, Kennedy flipped on the light, Ball fired and the snake shattered.

It was a porcelain snake. Mrs. Brewster said she had no idea how the ornament got on the table in the baby's room.
