Deen's new comrades immediately dubbed him "Legs." Non-plussed officers gave him an extra furlough and expedited an order for extra-long trousers.

Deen's family moved from Four Corners to Henderson, Nev., last April. He is now stationed at El Toro, Calif.

Statesman Will Have Its Own Correspondent in Washington

A. ROBERT SMITH, STATESMAN CORRESPONDENT

A. Robert Smith, fully-accredited reporter with access to the inner circles of Washington, D. C., will become The Oregon Statesman's own capitol correspondent effective January 1.

The new source in Washington, which will supplement but in no way replace the full facilities of The Associated Press of which The Statesman is a charter member, is designed to make available to Statesman readers stories of particular interest to the Willamette valley and the Northwest.

Smith, who spent some time in Salem last week looking over his new field, declared he was "delighted" to represent The Statesman and would concentrate largely on "politics, farm developments and all government decisions" affecting the area this newspaper serves. He will give considerable attention to Oregon's congressional delegation.

The Washington correspondent set up a bureau in the capitol 14 months ago, designed solely for northwest coverage. His papers include the Eugene Register-Guard, the Pendleton East Oregonian, the Longview Daily News, the Everett Herald, the Bremerton Sun and the Walla Walla Union Bulletin.

Smith previously worked on the Washington, D. C., Star and the Huntington (Pa.) Daily News, and took graduate work in international affairs at George Washington university. He is 26 and married.
