Former Salem Woman Dies In Portland

Mrs. Edna V. White, 73, widow of a former Salem policeman and a former resident of Salem, died Saturday in a Portland hospital.

She was the wife of W. J. White, who worked for the police department prior to his death 32 years ago. She had lived near Gresham for the past six years.

Mrs. White came to Salem with her parents when she was 12, from Viroqua, Wis. where she was born in 1878. She married about 56 years ago.

She is survived by sons Ellis P. White of Longview, Wash.; George D. White of Salem; R. Evans White of Pasadena, Calif.; a daughter, Mrs. Velma Bayer of Hoquiam, Wash.; brother, F. B. Southwick of Amity, and a sister, Mrs. Earl Jefferson of Junction City. There are also eight grandchildren and two great grandchildren.

Services will be held Tuesday at 10:30 a.m. in the W. T. Rigdon Chapel, with the Rev. W. H. Lyman officiating. Interment will be in City View Cemetery.

Workman Churned to Death in Pulp Mill Vat

HAMMOND, Ind. (AP) — A 39-year-old workman was churned to death Sunday in a paper pulp mixing vat at the Keyes Fibre Co., of Hammond.

Police said another workman accidentally turned on the agitator, a device like a huge electric fan, while Kenneth D. Roberts was working in two feet of pulp inside the vat.

Draft Horse Breeders Talk Of '52 Festivals

BY LILLIE L. MADSEN
Farm Editor, The Statesman
Six-horse hitch entries in Oregon festival events during 1952 were plans discussed Sunday by the Oregon Draft Horse Breeders Association.

Roy E. McCay, Eugene, president at the dinner meeting held at the Marion Hotel, Miss Helen Althaus, Troutdale, was present as secretary, with members in attendance from Eastern Oregon, Washington and Multnomah Counties and up and down the Willamette Valley.

Particularly stressed were plans for one hitch drawing a float for the Portland Rose Festival in June, and three or four sixhorse hitches for both the Pacific International Livestock Association in North Portland in October and the Oregon State Fair at Salem in September.

Miss Althaus reported that "Childhood Memories" was the theme of the 1952 Rose Festival and that she believed the draft horse entry would be very much in keeping with this. Appointed as a committee to make plans for this were Mrs. Lenora Althaus of Troutdale, Mrs. Alys S. McCracker, Walter Andregg and Mrs. Gladys M. Everett of Portland and Joseph Fex of Troutdale.

To meet with the Pacific International Livestock officials in an effort to re-instate the six-horse hitch at their October vent, Tracy Andregg of Portland, Raymond Kooch of Enterprise and Carol E. Buckley of Vernonia were made a committee, and to interview Leo Spitzbart of the Oregon State Fair, Mr. McCay, B. M. Thomas of Brownsville and Mr. Fex were named.

Del Harmon, Stanfield, insisted that the state Legislature appropriate $35,000 each year for the furtherance of animal husbandry at the Pacific International and "Services" which part of this might be converted into bringing the draft horse event back to that show.

"Don't think that the public doesn't know good hitches," Mr. Andregg stated, as he urged the association only to use its best equipment and its best drivers. "There is no more popular event in any of the fairs and shows than the old six-horse events, but they have got to be good."

Accident Fatal To Pedestrian

PORTLAND (AP) — Melvyn E. Baker, 74, died at a hospital here early Sunday a few hours after he had been struck by a car while crossing a street in the southeast section of Portland.

The driver of the car, Tony T. Kurar, also of Portland, was cited for having an improper operator's license.

The accident was Portland's fourth traffic fatality of the year.

Process Developed by Salem Man Mass-Produces Color Photo Prints

Kenneth W. Ashton, Salem photographer, holds a sheet of color photo prints mass produced by the dye transfer process with aid of machine at right which he designed. The printing enlarger is controlled automatically by a series of automatic timers and switches on panel in center. Ashton, whose portrait studio is at 498 N. Church St., believes he is the first to mass produce dye transfer color prints in studio work. (Statesman photo.)

Dye Transfer Makes Color Pictures

By DON DILL
Kenneth W. Ashton doesn't know whether he is a mechanical genius or just a lazy photographer. Whichever quality it is, the result is his inventing a machine to turn out color photo prints on a mass production basis.

The color photos are made by the dye transfer process... a method which any photographer will tell you is well nigh impossible to mass produce. But Ashton and his machine may be to the mass production of color photo prints what Henry Ford's Model T assembly line was to the automobile.

Ashton has been a photographer in Salem for 18 years, operating the Fireside Portrait Service. Recently he opened a new studio at 498 Church St. In the darkroom of this new studio are the machines which he started planning nearly six years ago. With them Ashton says he can make dye transfer color prints from color negatives in large enough quantities to compete with the cost of familiar black and white prints.

The dye transfer color process is one of the oldest for producing direct color photo prints, but it is very complicated and exacting. Briefly, the process consists of making three separate matrices from a color negative or color positive. The matrix is comparable to a photo negative being a clear gelatin support which will absorb a dye in proportion to the amount of light to which it was exposed through the original color negative. Color positives must be ## guarded heart of Ashton's process. Rivals Goldberg

To achieve mass production Ashton has devised a machine which rivals the inventions of Rube Goldberg. Taking an ordinary commercial five by seven inch enlarger Ashton first suspended it from a rolling platform above his work table to give him mobility. A traveling filter turret can be positioned between the enlarger lens and the matrix, and is operated by a solenoid and motor at the touch of a switch. Under the work table which has openings for different sizes of masks, depending on size print being made, a vacuum back easel travels on worm gears and rollers, operated by solenoids. This permits printing as many as a dozen different color photos on a sheet of 16 by 20 matrix material. Thus, when making the final color prints Ashton can dye and roll a dozen or more photos at the same time, rather than just one. Ashton estimates that 80 per cent of the hand work is cut by his mechanized enlarger-printer.

Another version of Ashton's machine used for black and white prints can automatically print photos with a saving of about 20 per cent in time and labor.

While Ashton states that he is no mechanical marvel—just a lazy photographer, an observer would feel that he has used much mental and physical energy to produce his amazing "Galloping Gertie" enlarger.
