First Hand Shopping Nets Many Menu Ideas; Surprising Variety

By MAXINE BUREN
Statesman Woman's Editor

The woman who does all her shopping by telephone or by husband and children, misses a great deal of interest when it comes to food.

We find many menu ideas as we wander around the grocery store, looking for this or that item on the list. We often note how many interesting new things come into the markets each year, and how many of the old favorites we'd forgotten about.

Every housewife, especially she who is a little low on interest in this business of cooking, should shop first hand at least once a week. She'll not only work herself up a nice appetite but get inspiration for newer dishes and a more variety in foods.

OLD FRIEND

One of the old things we noticed recently was rennet powder, or junket—that delicate flavored food that we used to love as a child and which was given as a special treat when we were slightly ill. It was really fun to be sick in those days, when special food was prepared and served on a tray with pretty dishes reserved especially for such occasions.

Now-a-days the rennet looks about the same, except the packages are modernized and the grocer now sports a variety in flavors. The fruit flavors are said to be preferred by the young folks, the vanilla and chocolate by older folk.

There's a variety of crisp foods for serving as snacks, and which are liked especially well by the youngsters. Corn curls, with cheese or chili flavor, thin wafers of various flavors, and three or four forms of pretzels. The latter, though not in the regular shape of pretzels are made from the same dough. Try regular ones, by the way, with salads or soups. The crisp saltiness goes well.

FROZEN FOOD SUPPLY

One of the new frozen foods we've noted are waffles, which are being sold in some of the shops. There's just about every type food now to be found in the frozen food display counter. Main dishes include Chinese foods, tamales, ready-fried chicken and shrimps which need a mere warming up. French fried potatoes are of course a familiar food in the display, as are the vegetables and fruits in wide variety. Among the finished desserts are a number of fancy cakes with frozen fillings. Pies are found in innumerable flavors and there are several frozen breads available now, including English muffins and crumpets, which went out of our stores for a while following the war and which made their reappearance just this past year.

TRY MIXES

There's great variety in the cake mixes they have now, too. Besides the older standbys of white and chocolate, angel food, yellow and several specialties have been added. Some of the better name mixes are just about as good as your best home mixed cake, too.

You'll notice the new fresh foods as they come into the markets, if you do your shopping first hand. Sometimes you'll be surprised at the variety found. Look at the shelves that have the fancy foods, too. Special olives (we noted a jar with three kinds in it) fancy appetizers, canned shellfish, and the many extra special jams and preserves.
