Court Affirms Verdict on Water Rights

The State Supreme Court Wednesday affirmed a decree of Circuit Judge M. A. Biggs, Harney County, in a suit brought by Earl W. Withers and others, involving a water right.

The lower court held that the state forfeited its water right during 13 years it owned a 40-acre tract of land in Harney County for failure to irrigate although water was available from Mill Creek and Coffee Pot Creek.

The opinion was written by Justice Hall Lusk with Justices Earl C. Latourette, Walter L. Toozie and George Rossman dissenting. The state acquired the land by deed but sold it in 1945 to Ralph E. Reed. The state engineer had applied the forfeiture law to the state and contended its successor, Reed, had no right or interest in the waters of Mill Creek or Coffee Pot Creek.

"Here the public interest is manifest," Justice Lusk wrote, "and any other construction would tend to diminish the value of the act and to defeat what we conceive to be the intention of the legislature."

Youth Jailed For Ramming Road Guardrail

A Salem youth who admitted deliberately damaging the new South River Road guardrail with his car 10 days ago was arrested Wednesday, pleaded guilty, and is to be sentenced Friday.

Donald Lee Smith, 18, of 392 S. High St., pleaded guilty in Marion County District Court to a charge of injuring a guard rail erected upon a highway. He was committed to the county jail pending sentence.

Deputy Sheriff Harvey Frankum, who made the investigation and arrest, said Smith told him he had battered the metal railing between the road and railroad, with his car because he planned to junk the old model auto and thought that would help. He said he had since wrecked and sold the car. Two hubcaps found at the scene of the damage, occurring only a few weeks after the rail was installed, aided in finding the driver.

The court said the charge called for a maximum of three months in jail or $100 fine. It also asked the County Court to assess the damage caused.
