Area Farmers Told to Read Data on Seeds

By LILLIE L. MADSEN
Farm Editor, The Statesman

Every farmer in the Willamette Valley knows how to read. Any farmer planning to plant seeds should use that knowledge. Don't take anyone's word for seed. Read the labels which the government require that all seeds carry and do not buy any seed without a label. That's what Ivan Stewart, widely known Salem forage seed man, will tell you.

Good stands of grasses and legumes cannot be obtained from low-germinating seed, no matter how well you prepare the seedbed and sow that seed.

With commercial seed, always read the label carefully, Stewart says. See that the seed comes from a reliable source, and that the tests for germination and purity are of recent date and show a satisfactory percentage of pure, live seed.

If the grower has produced his own seed, send a sample for test to a testing laboratory. A germination test or live seed test is sometimes made in the home, but such tests are usually un dependable because of the detailed technique required to test seeds, and the difficulty of accurately interpreting the results of such tests.

Strong, viable seeds of most forage crops will retain their vitality for several years if stored in a dry, cool place, where the temperature is uniform. Under average conditions, however, 1 to 3 years is about the limit of safety.

You should bear in mind, the seed expert will tell you, that new seed is not always germinable seed. It may fail to germinate because of dormancy, immaturity, poor curing or poor weather conditions at harvest. Any seed more than a year old should be tested even though it may have shown satisfactory germination the year before.

Certain species of grass seeds exhibit periods of dormancy of various durations following harvest. Some crops produce considerable so-called "hard seeds", which are those which remain impermeable to water for a period after harvest. When sown in a moist place under germinating conditions they may remain for months or years without swelling or decaying. Finally, when the seed coats decay, or are broken by temperature changes, the seeds may germinate. Hard-seeded legumes. Red and alsike clover and sweet clover seeds when threshed may contain relatively high percentages of hard seeds. These are responsible for many of the volunteer stands of clover on farms where ripened seeds are sown under with the sod, or where manure from clover hay containing ripe seeds is spread.

Too frequently, Stewart says, a farmer's poor stand of grass or legumes is his own fault, due to improper preparation of the seed bed; failure to buy from a reliable seed

New Schedules By UAL to Speed Flights

Little change in Salem airline schedules is slated for this summer, if Oregon adopts daylight saving time, H. F. Sweeney, station manager for United Air Lines announced Thursday.

Sweeney said the new schedules, effective Sunday, April 27, will mean better connections south and east and faster passenger, mail and cargo service from here to Los Angeles. The latter flight will be cut by two hours. Morning flights to Pendleton and Spokane will be available.

Northbound schedules (all on standard time) show planes leaving Salem at 7:40 a. m. (now 9:10), 12:25 p. m. (now 2:35), 6:20 p. m. (now 7:45). Southbound flights will be at 8:20 a. m. (now 9:25), 3:40 p. m. (now 4:45) and 6:45 p. m. (now 8).

firm, and failure to read the labels on the seed bags.
