Family, Child Welfare Group Hear Program

Recommendations for study of Salem's need in juvenile detention, divorce laws, marital counseling, education and recreation were made Thursday to the Family and Child Welfare Council of Salem Community Council.

The proposals to the new group came from a study committee headed by W. W. McKinney. They included research into a detention home for juveniles, ways to tighten present divorce laws, starting of a marital counseling organization, survey of education needs particularly for vocational schools for young persons.

Melvin Murphy, Portland, executive secretary of the Oregon Mental Health Association, stressed the need for preventing mental illness. He recommended a local family counseling service, using all interested agencies, with the possibility that Willamette University facilities might be the best center.

As to playgrounds, Murphy urged to be sure to leave spots without grass where children can play without upsetting the gardeners' ulcers.

Next council meeting will be June 12, according to Vernon Olsen, president.

Court Hears Barge Case

The state supreme court Thursday heard arguments of attorneys in a mandamus proceeding filed to compel Circuit Judge Alfred P. Dodson, Multnomah county, to assume jurisdiction in the action.

The proceeding involves picketing of barges operated by the Tidewater-Shaver barge lines of the Columbia River between Portland and McNary Dam. Judge Dodson refused to assume jurisdiction of the proceeding on the ground it should have been filed in the federal and not in the state courts.

Penitentiary Probe Asked By Governor

Gov. Douglas McKay Thursday asked the Oregon State Medical Society to investigate whether inmates of the Oregon state penitentiary are receiving the proper kind of food.

"I want to know whether the convicts are receiving better food or worse food than they should have," Governor McKay said.

The governor's request followed a Monday meeting at which the state emergency board was asked to approve $150,000 covering extra food costs at the prison. Board members criticized prison officials because they were spending more money on food than the 1951 legislature had authorized.

The emergency board was advised that the prison is spending 42 cents a day per convict for food and that amount is not sufficient. The last legislature based its appropriation on meals costing 22 cents per convict.

Governor McKay said he probably would be guided by the report of the Medical Society following its survey. The governor has authority to provide the $150,000 out of the emergency fund without any specific recommendation from the emergency board.

supervisor, told the emergency board that a large part of the increase in the cost of meals was due to serving more meat.
