Children's Furniture Grows Up With Junior, Longer Use

By SUE GARDNER
Basic juvenile furniture that grows with the child so he can use it as long as he lives in his parent's home is gaining favor with parents.

Robert W. Limpus has designed a group of modern furniture that will take care of a child from four years up and can be gradually rearranged for an adult's room.

serve as extra storage space. The compartment has two sliding doors at the top.

There are three basic units in the collection which can be arranged in many different formations. They are a bookcase, a cabinet with two sliding doors and a three-drawer chest. All are 34 inches high, 28 wide and 14 deep. Panels in the cabinet doors and chest drawers can be had in any color to contrast with the maple background. For older children, the units can be stacked, since the metal legs on the bottom are removable.

A work table with metal legs and lacquer finish has a top 44 by 19 inches and can be had 24 or 28 inches high. Chairs have metal legs and wooden seat and back rest and are 16 1/2 inches high.
