Boss Luby Trying to Land Dick Sinovic

Another big help this year is the fact that the pennant derby isn't shoo-in for a couple of clubs as it was in 1951 when Spokane and Vancouver made a shambles of the chase. Victoria now owns a comfortable lead and Spokane is a distinct threat. But none of the other clubs with the possible exception of Yakima and Wenatchee, can be yet counted out of the battle.

Our own Senators might be getting real tough one of these days, for Boss Luby isn't by any means content with what he's got. The long-ball hitting Bill Spacter joins the club in a few days, and Luby has been in touch with Joe Engle at Chattanooga, object: We want to beg, borrow or steal Dick Sinovic if he's available. Rousing Richard hasn't been going too well with the Lookouts lately, and Engle promised Luby that if the parent Washington Nationals provide Chattanooga with some expected help, Sinovic will be offered to Salem first and foremost,

"With that guy in center field for us, and with Spaeter's bat in the lineup," quoth the Senators bossman, "we could become just as tough as any outfit in the league."

(Anyone having truck with Washington Owner Clark Griffith please urge that he immediately provide Chattanooga with help.)
