On Etiquette By ROBERTA LEE

Q. Should a woman, traveling alone on a train, allow a new male acquaintance to pay for her meals?
 A. A woman traveling alone may properly accept the invitation of a male acquaintance for one meal in the diner. If the trip extends long enough for more meals en route, she should not take additional meals with him, or if she allows him to accompany her, she should pay for her own meals.

Q. Should a stranger knock on the closed hall door of a business office before entering?
 A. This is not done. Business offices are public. One does not, however, enter an office door marked "private" without an invitation.

Q. Should a letter of introduction be sealed?
 A. This is not usually done.
