Old Clippings Reveal Change of Mind on Many Subjects, Sox Too

By MAXINE BUREN
Statesman Woman's Editor

We have been writing for this paper for almost 16 years now, and though we are lax in keeping clippings of the stories, we have had short spells now and then of cutting out a story or two or even three and then setting back into the old way of not caring to re-read what we write.

Today, however, looking into an old scrapbook we found a story about some mighty up and coming things that were going on. The picture of ourselves that so brightens up the clipping would indicate that it's about ten years old, because we remember when we bought that blouse.

SOMETHING NIETY

"New cotton stockings will be ready in the fall. They'll fit the foot and ankle, and will be attractive and sheer. This cotton is American-grown and will be an interesting new development in American industry!"

And would you believe this one is so recent:

"A gentleman who likes to invent things has just completed a household locker for storing frozen foods. The contraption hasn't yet arrived in western markets but according to an illustration it looks like a cross between a cylindrical washing machine and a white enamel laundry lamp. It's said to be just the thing for those householders who spend considerable each month on downtown storage lockers."

FELL HARD

We remember of thinking that this was one thing we'd never fall for—but we fell hard and have never once regretted buying our freezer, though we get along on a very old and very inadequate refrigerator.

In the same story we noted that an Eastern manufacturer was producing gloves that fit either hand, and if the purchaser lost one, he simply went to the store and bought another. We never heard of these again, though they sounded good.

We were guilty in 1941 of making this bold statement:

"Never will there be a stockingless America. Smart manufacturers are not going to let American women go barelegged, not as long as their equipment can be turned into knitting sheer cottons if silks disappear."

SHORT ON SOX

But we did get pretty short on stockings there for awhile when manufacturers made war products and though the custom is certainly not a laundry one, there are many more women going around the city with bare legs now than there ever were before the war. We remember that things got so bad even we, who gets cold, wore legs without coverings.

It's fun to look over old clippings, we've been checking back on scrapbooks on ideas for building a home, and find that tastes certainly change—for the better, naturally.

DESIGN AN UNUSUAL CHEST

A mint of money is nice to dip into if you want unusual furniture. But get-up and ideas can get it for you, too. Look at ready-to-paint furniture and see it as another chore to do, or spot it for what it is, a big chance to create one-of-a-kind designs of your own. Because combinations of finishes and colors are in fashion now you might design a two-tone chest to go along with the trend. Lacquer it a medium or dark color, say gray or deep green—except for the door or drawer fronts and finish them with marble patterned decal that comes by the sheet. Good looking pulls step up the style of the piece. You may find interesting pulls ready-made or make long wood pulls and cover them with the decal marble. Another idea is to use small round drapery tie-backs from the drapery hardware department for pulls.

On Etiquette

By Roberta Lee

Q. When a man is accompanied by a woman at the theater, is it all right for him to go out in between acts for a smoke?

A. It would be rude for him to leave her in her seat, unless there are others to entertain her. It still is not the most courteous act, even though she is not alone.

Q. What is the usual tip to a sleeping-car porter on a train?

A. Approximately 50 cents for every night you spent in his car. Needless to say, extra service warrants extra recompense.

Q. What does an usher at a church wedding do if several women arrive together?

A. He offers his arm to the eldest. If no other ushers are there to escort the other women, they follow in pairs.
