On Etiquette

By ROBERTA LEE

Q. Certain friends are always saying, "You must come to see us soon," but do not set a time or date. What should be our reactions to this?

A. If you really want to visit them, you have a perfect right to phone and say, "If you are going to be home this evening, we should like to see you for awhile." If they agree, all well and good. If they are going to be out and do not name another definite evening,

The Statesman, Salem, Oregon, Thursday, August 28, 1952—3

then you can assume their previous invitations were insincere.

Q. Is it necessary to write a "thank you" letter, when one has been entertained informally at dinner?

A. No; when leaving, be sure to tell your hostess how much you have enjoyed the evening, and then in a few weeks invite her to your home.

Q. Is it proper to say, "I am glad to have seen you," when leaving an acquaintance one has met on the street?

A. If you can say this sincerely, yes.
