10—The Statesman, Salem, Oregon, Thursday, Sept. 18, 1952

The shortened left and center field fences at the ball park made for more home runs over those barricades during the '52 season (nine as compared to only three in 1951), but the overall output of roundtrippers here doesn't leave one with the impression that the circuit boasted its share of embryonic Babe Ruths. Only 24 homers were hit in 74 league games, 13 disappearing over the right field wall while nine departed via the shortened left field barrier, Twenty-three were hit last season. Two were hit this year inside the park (by Andy Anderson June 16 and Gene Tanselli Aug. 9), but nary a one flew over the center field fence. No one even came close to that hurdle, come to think of it. Consequently, we continue to accuse the manufacturers of the baseballs of killing the rabbits in their products. Before the war, players of these days are just as big and strong as they were then, and the pitching isn't any better. So it must be the deadness of the baseballs . . . Connie Perez was champion of the park's homer hitters

| Davey, a topflight contender for for 1952, with six belted out in league games. Andy Anderson, Jimmy Deyo, Bill Spaeter and Vince DiBiasi were the only other Senators able to conquer the fences, each contributing one. Jake Helmuth of classed the ferocious, wild-swing-Lewiston had two, as did Granny Gladstone of Victoria. One-timers ing Graziano and won virtually were Walt Pocekay, Ross McCormick, John Kovenz, Cece Garriott, Bob Williams, Milt Smith, Don Lundberg and Jerry Zuvella . . . The Senators fell but 12 double plays short of tieing the league record, winding up with 166. Vancouver's 1949 team had 179 for the alltime

Where They'll Be and What They'll Be Doing

What will the Senators ballgamers now be doing since the season is ended? Taking 'em one by one and listing place of residence: Bob Nelson, San Rafael, Cal., tree surgeon, Art Thrasher, Los Angeles, mechanic. Ray McNulty, Roseville, Cal., auto salesnan with brother's firm. Bob Collins, San Francisco, plumber, Ted Edmunds, Santa Barbara, back to school. Jack Hemphill, Silverton, operating service station. Bud Francis, Oakland, Cal., aircraft mechanic (quite likely to enter armed forces shortly). Vince DiBiasi, Oakland, Cal., clothing store salesman. Wayne Rick, Malin, Ore., farming. Dick Bartle, Portland, sporting goods salesman. Hugh Luby, Salem, auto salesman for Warner Motors. Gene Tanselli, Salem, fruit inspector for department of agriculture (Gene passed exam with grade of "A"). Connie Perez, Mantaza, Cuba, winter baseball leaguer. Wayne Peterson, Salem, state employee. Jim Deyo, Sacramento, back to school. Bill Spacter and Bill White, Los Angeles, school teachers. Trainer Pete Chinn, Oakland, Cal., employment unknown at present,

Hard to Tell Just Who Will Be Back in '53

Which ones will be back next year? Hard to say. The Senators organization owns most of the boys, but with GI drafting, retirements, possible trades, etc., and with Boss Luby doubly determined to produce a pennant winner in '53, one guess as good as another as to just who will be back again.

How did the organization make out financially this year? Final accounting hasn't yet been made. But Generalissimo Luby only Wednesday made the remark, "Things look pretty good for us for the season. I think we might come out of it in pretty good shape" . . .

Despite drawing around 20,000 less this year than last, the operation is certain to finish up in much better financial shape than in '51. Which is a credit to the gents running the show. Only the sale of a couple of players last season saved the Salems from dropping around $15,000. The deficit this year, if there is one at all, will be much, much less than that . . .

Wednesday but the time was getting shorter and shorter.

The Giants sliced a game off Brooklyn's first place lead in the National League, shutting out the Chicago Cubs, 2-0, while the tailend Pittsburgh Pirates, upset the Dodgers 4-1. That left the Brooks with a three-game lead with nine left to play.

Cleveland whipped the Washington Senators, 6-1, but remained two and a half lengths behind the American League pace-setting New York Yankees, who walloped the Detroit Tigers, 12-3.

In the only other game of the day, the St. Louis Browns amassed 16 hits including Bob Nieman's 15th home run to thrash the Boston Red Sox, 10-4.

Bob Lemon became the third Scribes Roast Indian pitcher to reach the 20 victory total as he doled out seven Washington safeties while his mates were clubbing starter Wale Leo's Gamble ter Masterson and Randy Gumpert for nine that included a homer by Bobby Avila. With Rookies Fourth 20-Game Season
