

Declaration of National Water Policy Studied

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — A proposed national water policy declaration was discussed Wednesday at the annual meeting of the National Reclamation Association.

Differences quickly developed on some points as individual state caucuses of delegates studied the proposal.

A committee made up of one member from each of the 17 states in the association prepared a detailed report of the caucuses. It also considered putting its recommendations in the form of a resolution to be adopted by the association Thursday.

The committee's recommendations call for local interests taking the lead in initiating, planning, financing, constructing and operating water resource developments with power development regarded as "integral in the national water policy."

A draft of the proposed resolution said the "trend toward federal domination should be reversed."

All future projects, the resolution draft said, should when appropriate be proclaimed for basin-wide development. Interstate compacts are the preferable approach "in organization for multiple-purpose, basin-wide developments of interstate character," it added.

Other highlights: Ownership shall be in "local interests, subject only to the satisfaction of contractual obligations."

"Local interests shall have a share in the revenues of power developed from multiple-purpose interstate projects."

Sales of power from federal developments should be made to public and private users at the bus bar (point of distribution) where possible. Duplicate transmission lines shall be avoided.

No subsidy shall be paid on account of the installation for power, but such installation shall be placed upon a revenue-producing basis sufficient to retire capital cost and to aid in other development.

Local power should be considered as an adjunct of the basic water rights.

Rates for federally produced power should be prescribed by the federal power commission by the federal power commission.

States should not have to give notice of intention to construct dam across intrastate streams unless it shall have been determined that such dams will jeopardize actual navigability.

The Washington state caucus decided to take no action on the proposed resolution until Thursday.
