Eradication of Barberry Advised For Grain Raisers

Barberry eradication is an old and proved method of reducing losses caused by stem rust of wheat, oats, barley, and rye, according to extension service circular 549 recently released by Oregon State College.

Rust-infected barberry bushes are the important source of stem rust in the northwestern states. The circular explains that from these bushes, the disease spreads to nearby grains and grasses during May and June.

The folder reviews how stem rust develops, how to identify the rust-spreading barberry, where it is found, and how weather affects stem rust.

The circular emphasizes that barberry eradication is a cooperative plant disease control project. It is important to report locations of barberry bushes to the county extension agent.

Proposed Bridge Over Columbia to Cost $11 Million

The proposed new bridge to span the Columbia River between Portland and Vancouver, alongside the present Interstate Bridge, will cost about 11 million dollars and will take from four to five years to plan, finance and build, according to the Washington and Oregon State Highway Commissions which will plan the span.

Both commissions are authorized to finance the bridge and maintain it by the issuance and sale of revenue bonds to be retired by bridge tolls until the debt could be paid. At such a time the bridge would become toll free.

At a recent meeting of the commissions it was proposed that the Oregon Commission prepare the plans and specifications and supervise the construction with the approval of the Washington group which would handle the bond sales.
