'Winter' Disease List Climbs in Marion County

As reports of "winter" diseases climbed in Marion County, but not seriously, the health department asked Tuesday for physicians to report promptly any outbreaks of influenza.

The warning followed the recent notices that influenza virus type "A prime" had been identified in an outbreak in Missouri. Reports are sought to aid in control of the infection.

The county's list of new cases of communicable diseases for last week, announced Tuesday, includes only one of influenza, with three of scarlet fever, two each of conjunctivitis, mumps, broncho pneumonia, lobar pneumonia, ringworm, gonorrhea and whooping cough; one case of chickenpox and German measles. There were two cases of tuberculosis outside Salem, plus eight in institutions.

Storm Damage Mounting in Forest Areas

January storm damage in Northwest Oregon forest areas, perhaps the worst in several years, was reported Tuesday.

G. F. Horne, acting Salem District forester for the U. S. Bureau of Land Management, said the rain and windstorms had hit most heavily in the Black Rock area and southwest of Willamina, both in Polk County, and in the Crabtree area of Linn County.

The salvage problem for timber damaged by wind, insects and fire already was serious, and the 1953 BLM sale program involved mostly such timber. The recent storms will complicate the problem, said Horne. Surveys already have started to determine the actual extent.

The first storms of the winter came while the ground was dry and roots firm, resulting in broken trees, while the more recent winds uprooted trees from rain-soaked ground.

Bids were to have been opened Monday on 485,000 board feet of salvage timber near Jordan in Linn County, but none was received, reportedly due to new windthrow, cutting value of the tract. Whether such added damage did occur will be checked by BLM foresters. If the present appraisal is deemed too high, new bids will be called. Otherwise the tract is open for bids for 90 days.

County Courts to Confer on Cost of Bridge Signals

Marion and Linn County Courts are to confer Thursday on a proposal to share the cost of installing traffic signal lights on the Stayton bridge over the Santiam River.

The cost was estimated at $4,000 according to Marion County Commissioner Roy Rice, who said the State Highway Department would cooperate in work on the project. Stayton organizations had requested the signals, to direct one-way traffic across the inter-county span, because of the narrowness of the roadway, making passage difficult for large vehicles.

Mrs. Coffman Dies in California

Death of Mrs. Dorothy Esther Coffman, former Salem resident, in Stockton, Calif., Monday was learned here Tuesday.

Mrs. Coffman was the wife of J. G. Coffman of Stockton; daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Julius Nelson, pioneer Salem residents, and a niece by marriage of Mrs.

Anna Fischer, 85, School Teacher, Dies

Miss Anna Fischer, 85, longtime Salem school teacher, died in Jefferson Tuesday.

Miss Fischer had taught in the Salem public school system for nearly 50 years prior to her retirement in 1938. She had been principal for 26 years at Richmond School. Prior to that she had taught in the old Washington School and other early Salem public schools.

Death came at the home of her niece, Mrs. James W. Anderson at Jefferson, where Miss Fischer had resided for the past three years.

Miss Fischer was born Oct. 4, 1867, in Mazomanie, Wis., and came to Salem as a young woman.

Surviving, in addition to Mrs. Anderson, are three other nieces; Mrs. Charles T. Gilbert of Salem, and Mrs. Margarita F. Pollard and Mrs. Dorothy Pyle, both of Vista, Calif.

Funeral arrangements are being made by Howell-Edwards Chapel of Salem.
