Preachers, Politicians Ponder Problems

Statewide political issues of special interest to churchmen were "hashed over" in Salem Friday by Presbyterian ministers and legislators, in a special seminar. Shown here are (from left) the Rev. Oscar W. Payne, Coos Bay pastor formerly at Salem; Sen. Lowell W. Steen, Milton-Freewater; Sen. Paul Geddes, Roseburg; the Rev. Thom H. Hunter, pastor at University of Oregon.

Annual Study Proposed for Moral Issues

The importance of finding means to keep people better informed on the moral phases of public issues was stressed at the Oregon Legislative Seminar closed Friday at First Presbyterian Church.

The 35 Presbyterian ministers from over the state who participated recommended that the program be taken over by Oregon Council of Churches as a "Christian citizen's seminar" on an interdenominational basis. It would be for the study of community and state issues.

The pastors emphasized that understanding was essential in order that citizens know how to express themselves on issues. They felt that Christians should be better equipped to exert a consistent Christian influence in political issues. They also expressed encouragement at the number of legislators who are active churchmen in their own communities.

Visits to legislative sessions and committee meetings were paid by the ministers after hearing discussions of moral issues before the current Legislature—liquor and civil liberties.

Four senators and a representative spoke at the closing meeting. Sen. Paul Geddes of Roseburg emphasized that Christians should give serious thinking to political issues until they have opinions.

Sen. Lowell Steen of Milton-Freewater, urged that churchmen involve themselves in other community organizations which give expression on community situations.

Rep. Mark Hatfield of Salem suggested the necessity of a Christian's determining whether he is willing to assume his proper place as a citizen.

Others were Sen. Walter C. Giersbach of Forest Grove and Sen. Douglas R. Yeater of Salem.

Brown to Talk At Prophetic Rally Sunday

The Rev. Fred Brown, evangelist from Chattanooga, Tenn., will speak at a prophetic rally at First Baptist Church Sunday afternoon at 3.

Treating the subject of "The Return of Christ," Brown will bring a detailed study of the various aspects of that advent. Bill MacDougall, soloist with the evangelistic party and former tenor with the Old Fashion Revival Hour quartet, will sing.

At the morning worship service Brown will occupy the pulpit. He also will speak to the junior high and high school young people at 6:15 and at the evening service at 7:30.

The special meetings will continue throughout the coming week, each evening at 7:30 o'clock. An additional feature is the Bible study class. Brown is teaching each morning at 9:30 o'clock.
