Southwick attended Oregon State College and after service in World War I returned to Salem and took a position with the Industrial Accident Commission.

In other business Friday, the court took under advisement two bids opened on a new bulldozer for county road crews. One bid, from the Wood Tractor Co., of Portland, quoted a price of $16,031, minus the trade-in value of $5,750 allowed for the county's present old machine.

The other bid, from Interstate Tractor Co., of Salem, quoted a price of $16,324, with $4,800 allowed on a trade-in.

Suit Seeks End To Picketing For Building
A suit seeking to halt picketing of the T. A. Livesley Building in downtown was heard in Marion County circuit court Friday and taken under advisement by Judge Rex Kimmel.

The complaint was filed by T. A. Livesley and Co., whose big office building has been picketed since last April 16 by Building Service Employees International Union, Local 160.

The union was named as defendant along with W. C. Johnson and Betty Frahm, president and secretary-treasurer, respectively, of the local. The suit also seeks $1,000 in damages.

The union has maintained that the company has refused to renew the union work contract for the building's maintenance employes, and that the building has refused to hire union help.

R. M. Livesley, president of the company, testified that he left the matter of continuing a contract with the union strictly up to the building employes. When they decided to reject a contract they formed an association of their own called the Livesley Building Maintenance Association.

Several employes of the building also testified similarly.

Defendant attorneys attempted to show that the maintenance association was a pseudo organization agreed upon for the purpose of fighting the union.

A request by the plaintiff asking for a temporary injunction halting the picketing during the pendency of the suit was denied several weeks ago by Judge Kimmel.

Century of Progress

Godey's Lady's Book Falls Far Short of Modern Woman's Magazine

By MAXINE BUREN
Statesman Woman's Editor

We ran across an interesting story comparing the most popular woman's magazine of 1853, Godey's Lady's Book, with its modern counterpart. Comparison appeared in a recent edition of Coffee-Newsletter, a small booklet which features not only the products of the Pan American Coffee Bureau, but many other items.

Here are some of the facts revealed in the article: Godey's Lady's Book, the first of the great woman's magazines was a major conversation piece of its time, but fell far short of what we now consider good reading. However it had its points.

Fashion was extremely important in Godey's Lady's Book, which was considered a style handbook. Drawings of dresses and coats usually in black and white, but we know also of those delicately tinted prints which are now museum pieces. Most fashions illustrated were for the purpose of copying. Sewing was done at home by dressmakers or in establishments where the gowns were created for particular customers. The function of the magazine was to show the fashion for "imitation" by the dressmaker.

Food Department
Food had its department, but quite different from the tested recipes and beautifully colored-illustrations of today. There were no illustrations at all, no definite recipes, one just had to take chances on the practicability of "receipts." Here's one Hasty Pudding: Set some milk on the fire until it boils, add a little salt. Stir in as much flour as will make it the proper thickness. Let it boil quickly for a few minutes, beating constantly while on. Put in a dish and eat with cold butter and sugar. Some persons add eggs to this.

Most any modern bride could do as well as that without a recipe.

"Home equipment was given some consideration in stories like this." A thoroughly successful and cheap washing machine has yet to be invented. If any of our readers can set their wits to work and contrive some suitable apparatus, we will contrive to publish an account of it.

Love Story
Literature took a definite trend. Certainly far from the snappy pourings out from the heart of modern love stories writers. Here is an example of the literary style of Godey's:

"Women had never captivated me. However bright and fascinating may have been the charms which fell upon me to that day, all had fallen as rays of the sun upon unmetled rock. Thus matters remained until I reached the age of 24. Need I say that a change came over me? Mary E. was the silver wand that had stricken living waters from the rock before unrent."

The article of course finds something of interest to the writer, namely coffee. Here is the conclusion: Readers of Godey's shared the love of good coffee with the modern reader of women's magazines, declares the coffee bureau editor. A quote from the 1853 magazine on family breakfasts, smacks of propagandism.

"Oh what a delightful meal it is... the flavorful fumes of coffee blending their native incense with the enjoyment of every item making up that grand aggregate of substantial bliss, breakfast. There's bread, evoking the remembrances of the cornfield with its burnished spears of grain waving in the breeze... and butter, recalling the dappled cows lolling in green pastures... not to mention associations of coffee which set us to thinking of the Arabian Nights and the Caliph Haroun Al Raschid and the beautiful princess all living in a world of enchantment which requires only the proper spell to unfold its treasure to us."

We aren't so sure of the dappled cows and Al Raschid, but after all that, we certainly need a cup of good coffee.
