to come, Don has accepted his call for military training, "to defend his country if necessary." He, with the rest of his number, is slated to leave Salem Wednesday for Portland and then to Fort Lewis

But what preceded that which is now scheduled for Don Archibald and other Don's approaching by Black. "It is the American way the age of 18 years?

Don, like many of his buddies, was a student at Salem High when he reached 18. Under the Selective Service Act, he was called upon to register with his local draft board. That was the last he heard from Local Board 10 until sometime aftof age. The draft call hasn't yet had to dip any farther than the 18½-year-olds.

With this notice Don was informed that he could receive his induction papers in about ceived recently and now it's off to training camps.

The stop in Portland Wednesday will include another physical exam and the young men will be sworn into the service. From then until discharge they are "Army prop-men seems to be a growing thing, reports John Black, chairman of Local Draft Board 10, Salem. "Requests for deferments giving diverse reasons are getting fewer all the time as young men are coming to realize the growing importance of their military obligations," Black explained. Early in the Korean conflict Black said his office was barraged with innumerable reasons for not being drafted.

Fewer Deferment Pleas

"Oh, the complaints do continue, though," he said. Religious groups protesting any form of combat must be considered by the board. "Oftimes these people can be plac-ed in non-combat work with the Army."

One of the more difficult groups to deal with, according to draft board records, are the people living in remote districts far-removed from metropolitan areas.

"These persons have often lost contact with the national concept of our international problem and must be reminded of their respon-sibility," Black explained. "These people often suggest that someone else be taken. They are then regarding the draft like taxes - a good thing for the other fellow to take care of," Black said. "I try to tell them that ours is principally a draft procurement office; not a deferment office. We are given an allotted number of men for a month's draft and that number must be met. If one man says he can't make it, and his reason is a sound one, then someone must be

Cement Poses Trade Problem

ISTANBUL UM - Greece wants Turkey to buy its cement from Greece instead of Yugoslavia. That's been one of the points at issue in trade talks between the two countries.

Informants say Turkey has been buying large quanties of cement from Marshal Tito's government because (1) the price is lower than the Greek price and (2) Turkey hopes to develop a bigger trade with Yugoslavia.

The dispute over cement comes at a time when Western diplomats are hoping that Turkey, Greece and Yugoslavia will be able to ef-"Patients will excuse almost anything except neglect," said Hodges.
