Top Priority For Dental School Seen

Top priority for the proposed new state dental college in Portland, now listed in eighth place in the state board of higher education construction program for the 1953-55 biennium, looked likely Friday at the Oregon legislature.

This was indicated by a member of the joint ways and means subcommittee studying the state's building program.

Cost of the new dental school was estimated at approximately $2,200,000. The committee was advised that the current dental college is inadequate to carry on and that extensive improvements are required in event a new plant is not approved. "It would be a waste of funds to improve the current plant," a committee member averred.

Statistics presented at the meeting of the committee Friday showed that many prospective students have been compelled to enter dental schools in other western states because of the limited facilities in Oregon.

The building committee said it hoped to file its recommendations early next week. The committee members were reluctant to discuss the attitude of the state board of higher education in connection with the proposal to advance the dental college on the priority list.

Reconstruction of the center section of the Oregon State Hospital here probably will top the priority list of the state board of control involving state institutions.

Labor Battles Picket Bill In Committee

By HECTOR L. FOX Associated Press Writer

Labor carried its battle against the House-approved bill to ban organizational picketing into a Senate labor committee hearing Friday, but made no mention of a substitute proposal suggested two days ago by Gov. Paul L. Patterson.

The committee was told by Donald S. Richardson, Portland attorney representing the AFL and CIO, the organizational picketing measure was "more restrictive than the Taft-Hartley act."

Richardson said it was a "half-way attempt" to set up a labor relations board and would not prevent employers from creating so-called company unions. He also argued it would permit employers to block union organization by influencing employees pending action on a petition for an election for certification.

"This is an unworkable labor relations act," Richardson declared. "It answers no problems — if any problems exist. Organizational picketing as now conducted merely advertises the fact that a dispute of lawful purpose exists."

William J. Masters, also a Portland attorney, paraded 11 employer representatives whose testimony chiefly concerned picketing activities at their establishments in various parts of the state.

Masters said the controversial legislation is "not a matter of the employer and a union sitting down to bargain whether the employer's workers are to be handed over like sheep."

"The employer has to sell his product," he added. "Unions should do the same kind of selling."

The House had a busy afternoon Friday. It approved proposals to create a commission to preserve, develop and protect the recreational, scenic and historical values of the Columbia Gorge; require display of the state flag on public buildings, and banning members of state commissions from accepting paid jobs under those commissions.

Sen. Richard L. Neuberger's bill to let the department of agriculture ban bread softeners if the federal government finds them harmful went back to committee when opposition developed over the dependency provision. Rep. Alva Goodrich, Bend, said the state ought to act independently.

The House state and federal affairs committee unanimously approved the senate-passed bill to ban billboards on future newly-constructed main highways, and also recommended defeat of a proposed constitutional amendment permitting state institutions to be located outside Marion County.

"Oh dear! I wonder what happened?"

Suppose you had been watching this tense scene, just as this woman and child did... Even though you watched and watched, chances are you'd have to do what she did — get a newspaper to get the full story.

Then, for the first time, you'd learn that the girl on the ladder had fallen into the Potomac River, narrowly escaped being swept over the falls, and had clung to a rock for three hours. Then the firemen rescued her.

Being on the spot is not much better than seeing one or two photographs of the scene, or seeing a headline about it, or hearing a brief announcement.

All of these can whet your appetite for news, but they cannot satisfy your hunger for the whole story... the way you want it... right away... in all its local color.

This goes for advertising, too. The brief message that hangs in the air... or brief headlines here or there... may indeed have a momentary interest.

But the newspaper ad carries the bristles quality, the urgency of the newspaper itself.

Like a news item, the ad can be examined and re-examined. Can be read any time. Anywhere. Can be clipped and carried in a pocketbook.

Add to all this the fact that the newspaper reaches just about everybody in town, and you know why the newspaper is the nation's most effective advertising medium.

The newspaper is always "first with the most"
