Historic Site Viewed

A. M. Hansen, Salem pioneer business man, inspects real estate sign at the leveled-off site where Hansen's old, historical wood-working mill stood for 50 years at Mill and South Church Streets. The mill, oldest of its kind in Salem, was torn down recently.

Andrew M. Hansen One of Last Of Salem Industrial Pioneers

All that's left of one of Salem's pioneer industries is one slim, little gray-haired man with a mighty twinkle in his clear eyes and a ready quip on his tongue.

He is Andrew M. Hansen, founder of a sash-and-door manufacturing concern which spanned some 65 years of Salem's history. The firm is dissolved now and even the building which housed the historic plant was torn down recently.

"Andy" Hansen still resides with his wife in the large, old-fashioned house he built 50 years ago at 562 Mill St. overlooking the southwest corner of Mill and South Church Streets.

"I've lived in Salem 81 years now," said the 85-year-old Hansen the other day. "I used to always tell people I could never get abroad of enough money to get out of town. I knew all the old-timers and called 'em all by name."

He looked out onto the abrupt incline of Mill Street there.

"When I first moved my shop to this corner," he said, "there were no businesses and not many houses in this end of town. Mill Street was so steep you could barely drive a team up the street. I got the city street commissioner to grade the road and I helped with funds of my own."

"There was no bridge on Church Street over Mill Creek, either," he added. "I got in on that project too. Many winters this whole section would flood and the floor of my mill would be under a couple of feet of water."

He first entered business when he "bought into" the Churchill Sash and Door Co. 65 years ago. Parts of that old brick building still remain at the corner of High and Trade Streets. Several moves, several partners and seven years later found the firm in a large wooden structure on High and Mill Streets.

Moves Plant Site
Then Hansen decided to relocate the plant on his property at the corner of Church and Mill Streets, where it was to remain for nearly 50 years.

"The building was too big to move down the Mill Street hill," Hansen recalls. "So we just cut it in half and moved it one section at a time. Then we stacked one half on top of the other half and made a two story building out of it."

"That was when I badgered the city into improving Mill Street."

The mill flourished, Hansen remembers, and at the peak of operations "I can't recall how many years ago," it employed 75 men.

Salem was expanding and much of the local construction used, and probably still contains, nearly all of the Hansen mill output of sashing, doors and planing lumber.

Gives Away Plans
During one period, in order to encourage purchase of lumber products, Hansen drew and gave away house plans to customers.

Discovery of Bodies Raises Fire Toll to 34

CHICAGO (AP) — Discovery of six more bodies Sunday raised to 34 the known death toll in the Haber plant fire Thursday as Coroner Walter E. McCarron announced he will subpoena officials for a "detailed" inquiry into the blaze.

McCarron pledged an inquest "in minute detail" to try to find out the cause of the explosion and fire. Twenty-eight of 37 persons hurt in the disaster still are hospitalized. Four are on the critical list.

McCarron said his investigation of the Haber Corporation plant showed the building was under repair and had only one fire escape, which led from the fourth to the second floor.

The six bodies discovered Sunday were near the lone fire escape on the third floor level. Three were women and three men.

Officials of all city and state agencies connected with the fire will be subpoenaed for the inquest April 29, McCarron said. He added, "I further intend to have all necessary officials of the Haber Corporation" at the hearing.

Peron Rallies Strength for New Campaign

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — President Juan D. Peron rallied the full strength of supporting labor, military and political forces Sunday behind his two-pronged drive stamp out rumor peddlers and profiteers.

The president has said these two elements have been the cause of recent events which have shattered Argentina's order and tranquility.

A spokesman for the federal police hinted that the arrests of rumormongers continued throughout the country Sunday. But he would give no figures to the 77 known to have been swept into the police net in Buenos Aires along Saturday.

Relatives said Adolfo Mitre, a member of the family which owns Buenos Aires' big independent newspaper La Nacion, was arrested Sunday morning in the roundup.

The relatives said Mitre was picked up when he was heard to say "What a shame" as he stood in front of the burned out aristocratic Jockey Club. The swank club was burned out by Peron's supporters in the night of violence following last Wednesday's bomb episode during a Peron address in the Plaza De Mayo. Six persons were killed in the bomb explosions.

The police spokesman said 117 food shops had been padlocked and their owners jailed in the crackdown against violators of the government's tough new price controls.

1,000 Battle Forest Fire In New Mexico

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — Continuing good weather brought hope Sunday that more than 1,000 firefighters battling a huge forest fire in the Sacramento Mountains may soon bring the flames under control.

"If the good weather holds, I'm sure we'll have it controlled sometime tomorrow," said W. L. Hansen, assistant regional forester.

He said the latest reports from the fire scene in South-Central New Mexico were that the men hoped to complete a fireline around the banana shaped fire which has raged over 23,500 acres since it started as a spark in a sawmill Friday.

He warned, however, that if the gusty winds which swept the area Friday return, the flames could easily get out of hand again.

Meanwhile, a 4,000-acre fire in the Coronado National Forest of Eastern Arizona was under control but still burning. The blaze, described as the worst in the forest there since 1920, was believed to have been started by a careless smoker.
