The 15-year-old boy would rather sit and watch television. Or read comic books. Or fool with little chickens at his home in this community of 100 population.

The few times he does play cowboy, Billy carries his guns on two leather belts which, end to end, surround his 60-inch waist, His specially made overalls are kept together at the side by a shoestring. "He busts the buttons off," explains his mother, Mrs. Harry Greenwell.

Mrs. Greenwell, who weighed 169 pounds until she became ill two years ago, is down to $4 now and doctors are unable to say why.

They present an ironic contrast—mother and son—one unable to gain weight and the other unable to lose it.

Billy weighed about $½ pounds at birth and appeared normal until he had whooping cough at the age of 3. Then his unusual growth began.

One doctor blamed it on thyroid trouble and gave him some shots. But the family found this too expensive and put Billy on a diet—he couldn't stick to it.
