New Gadget Keeps Tots from Turning on Gas, Plastic Knob

By ELENORE LESTER Mothers need eyes in back of their heads to let them know what Junior is up to every minute of the day. Countless times during the day the average woman rescues her two or three year old from some dangerous situation.

One common troublemaker is the gas jet. Those interesting little knobs on the stove fascinate most youngsters. Another headache in some homes is the electric fan, which most definitely should not be used uncovered in homes where there are children. One new fan, which may be used as a floor circulator or inserted in any window, as an exhaust fan, has been made extra safe by being enclosed in five rings with fine-mesh grills front and back.

The tiny notches in the outer portion mesh with those in an inner plastic disc. After the stove has been turned on or off, the outer knob returns to its safety position.

Some of the newest model ranges are now equipped with the knobs, which also are available as replacement parts. A home-maker can remove old type knobs and install the new ones on most stoves in a few minutes.

Made of fire-resistant Plaskon material, this gadget makes it impossible to turn on the gas or electricity until the knob is pressed firmly enough to make

Quakers Send Needy Clothes

NEW YORK (AP)—Half a million garments take a lot of making. That is the number which have been made up new in 13 years and shipped from the sewing room of the Friends (Quaker) Meeting House here.

The Quakers send the garments to devastated areas in 28 countries throughout the world. Hundreds of women from 11 denominations work with the Quakers. Much of the work is done in the sewing room which also acts as receiving and shipping center for outlying areas.

In addition to handling new garments, the center collects and ships thousands of tons of used garments. A number of manufacturers donate materials for the new garments or provide them at reduced prices.
