Expert On Amateurs Suggests Some On Thursday Of Rules Not to Follow in Gardens The Salem Music Teachers' Association will present the annual By MAXINE BUREN Iva F. Turner memorial concert

Statesman Woman's Editor

Our way with a garden should probably cause an expert to break down, completely unnerved. Though few things that go on in our flower and vegetable garden are according to the book, we eventually get a few carrots, spinach, pansies and chrysanthemums-though not always in the places expected.

We would like to have a heart to heart talk with other amateurs-those who aspire to great things from nature and are willing to dig for them.

First, let us impress upon you beginners never to heed rules. Read 'em, but pay no attention. It is safe and practical for experts to go by the rules, but an amateur-never. "An amateur," may we remark sagely, "may sometime become an expert, but once you are an expert, you're sunk."

When setting out the vegetable garden, it is well to stretch a string to mark the rows. Then beginning at one stake, draw your row of seeds back and forth across the line, even dipping over into the other row. This gives personality to the garden and one sometimes gets the cutest effects.

If you're a real dirt-under-the-fingernails type gardener, with love in your heart for this great American pastime, plant the little seedlings early-too late now, but say in early April. Then when the little things give up, you can replant as many times as the weather allows.

By this system one can keep busily occupied for months even in the smallest space.

Weed killers are handy, but you'll have more fun if you rush right into the spraying program without bothering about directions (always there in the small type). The sport here is to spray the stuff liberally, suggested direction is from the upwind side.

Use your own judgment when planting flowers. Listen with apparent interest to your neighbors and the plant salesman, then put 'em in the sun or shade wherever your inventive soul suggests.

If a plant wants to live bad enough, it will live wherever you put it, that's what we always say.

Lawn mowing can be fun. Even after failing to interest the children in guiding the mower and having found your spouse (this means men, too) sleeping on the job, make clipping a game.

One of the best tricks we know is the man who mows half his lawn every few days. This allows half the grass to be high and half to be fresh-clipped. This, of course, is good because nobody ever suspects him of mowing it.

Back to vegetables. We once knew a lazy man who was an expert at growing peas. Here's the way he said he did it. Any dry day after March 1, he would sit down on a log near his garden spot, and with best marble-shooting technique, would send the little green peas spinning through the air onto the hard, cold, bare earth. After a short doze and a chaw or two, he would go home and forget the crop until harvest time.

We cannot vouch for the authenticity of this method, but we do know he grew the best darn peas in the neighborhood.
