Keally Lauds Capitol Area Improvement

Improvement of the state capitol area was praised here Saturday by Francis Keally, New York City Architect, who prepared plans and specifications and supervised construction of the current capitol buildings.

Keally stopped here briefly Saturday en route from Seattle where he attended an architect's convention. He was en route to California.

He mentioned particularly the landscaping and improvement of the grounds surrounding the Public Service and State Highway Department buildings which were the last completed in the state construction program involving the capitol area. While here he also inspected the new Marion County courthouse now under construction. Keally said construction of this structure would add much to the beauty of Salem's civic center.

Keally still is being considered for consultant in completion of the capitol area development. The state capitol planning commission has recommended an appropriation of $50,000 to permit Keally to supervise future development operations. No definite decision has been reached either by the planning commission or the State Board of Control on Keally's recommendation to construct the proposed new State Supreme Court building in the center of North Summer Street in the vicinity of D Street.

The New York architect contends this construction would block off the capitol area development without interfering with the view of the capitol by motorists entering the city from the North.

It has been proposed that the State Emergency Board appropriate $50,000 to cover the cost of Keally's employment. The 1953 Legislature failed to take any action on the appropriation.

Keally is now consulting architect in connection with construction of two libraries in Berlin.

He had intended to confer with Gov. Paul Patterson but found the latter was out of the city.

Keally merely smiled when advised of the controversy here in connection with placing the Venus statue on the courthouse grounds.

TURNER — An Indian head penny dated 106 and a 1902 quarter were found by Mr. and Mrs. Perry Wolf when they removed a partition between the kitchen and front room of their home while remodeling the residence.

There is a Franklin car advertisement tells about Whitman's record-breaking run from San Francisco to New York over heaviest mountain grades, across hot sandy trackless desert, through Nebraska mud in 15 days, 2 hours, 12 minutes.

"Proved ability, reliability, and endurance not hitherto believed possible in any motor-car. No other car in the world could have done these things. f.o.b. Syracuse list shaft run-about $1,800 and 6 cylinder touring-car $4,000.

The Fearless seemed to be the expensive car of the time 1907 model 15 was $3,000. The Cadillac ad read: Model H will accommodate five persons; 30 horse power capable of 50 miles per hour. Price $2,500 then stated all prices f.o.b. and do not include lamps."
