Salem Combats Hot Weather With Large Doses of Water

The climbing mercury of recent days made enough people turn showers on themselves and their lawns to boost Salem water use to some 18 million gallons Monday.

That figure, though twice the consumption of the previous Monday, is far from the all-time daily record of some 21 million gallons set two years ago.

Nor does it threaten the continuing supply of water here. The city is in "good shape" for the summer, according to Water Manager John L. Geren.

He pointed out that the huge new reservoir on Turner Hill is available to keep water flowing here at a faster rate. Normally some water is being taken out of that reservoir already, but is not required, and it has not been in use during the past week.

The pipeline has a maximum flow of 19 million gallons per day. When use exceeds that figure, the reservoirs are drawn on. In the city main reservoir capacity is 10 million gallons, which it is planned to keep for emergency use, while drawing on Turner Hill.

While use rose to 14 million gallons last Friday, then fell to 12 million daily over the week end, holiday makers "poured it on" beginning Monday, said Geren. He said there were some difficulties with pumping capacity Monday in high level areas of the city, but no deficiencies.

How we handle a cool customer... lettuce, for instance

More than a billion heads of lettuce went to the markets of the U.S. over S.P. lines last year. That much lettuce would fill a train of refrigerator cars 720 miles long, and constitutes almost four fifths of the total lettuce crop of the country. That's a lot of lettuce—and so is the $111,157,000* that went into the pockets of the lettuce growers of S.P.'s Golden Empire. Naturally, lettuce must be crisp and fresh when it is delivered to every corner of the country, or else nobody would buy it. Part of the secret of getting enormous quantities of lettuce (or any other perishable fruits or vegetables) to distant markets in prime condition is S.P.'s great fleet of refrigerator cars.

These cars—38,000 of them—make up the world's largest "reefer" system. (More than 10,000 new ones have been added since V-J Day.) They operate under the banner of Pacific Fruit Express (half-owned by Southern Pacific). But it takes more than refrigerator cars alone to market the Golden Empire's produce effectively. It also takes S.P.'s swift and flexible scheduling of these cars—plus an intricate process known as "diversion," which permits shippers of strategic carloads of fresh fruits and vegetables to change destinations en route at the drop of a phone call, to meet more favorable market conditions. Such service enables the Golden Empire's producers of perishables to sell competitively almost anywhere in the country. Thus, S.P. has helped the commerce of the Golden Empire grow by expanding the market for things the area produces. And almost every resident benefits, either directly or indirectly. For proof, let's look at the record: From 1941 to 1950, the average income of the people in the Golden Empire rose 184.6%—a better showing than the rest of the U.S. And S.P. intends to continue to promote—through service—the healthy growth of the Golden Empire, to the advantage of everyone. *Statistical Abstract of the U.S., 1952.
