Mrs. Busch Succumbs to 4-Year Illness

Mrs. Anna Busch, 75, a Salem resident for 35 years, died Monday at her home, 1490 N. 4th St., after an illness of four years. Mrs. Busch was born in Germany May 26, 1878, and came to this country with her parents when she was in her late teens. She was married in Texas to Ferdinand Busch, who died in 1933. In 1911 the couple came to Oregon, living on a farm near Turner until moving to Salem in 1918.

A member of Dorcas Missionary Society of Christ Lutheran Church, Mrs. Busch had been a member of that church since coming to Oregon. For many years she was employed at Paulus Brothers Packing Co. here. Surviving are one daughter, Mrs. Chris Battalio, Salem; one son, Karl W. Busch, Salem; and a brother, John Neumann, Waco, Tex.; also one granddaughter, one grandson and two great granddaughters. Funeral services will be announced later by Clough-Barrick Co.

Feeding Tests Yield Cheaper, Bigger Chicks

By LILLIE L. MADSEN
Farm Editor, The Statesman
CORVALLIS—Whether it pays to go to college or not might depend upon whether you look at it from the chicken's standpoint or from the chicken's standpoint. Mrs. Public who want chicken every Sunday. Dr. J. E. Parker, head of the Oregon State College poultry department, remarked Monday as he told of feeding experiments carried on in the poultry division there.

As a result of the tests, 2,000 chicks reached the broiler market weight of three pounds in an average of 68 days, and required only 8.6 pounds of broiler mash every Sunday. Most growers, Dr. Parker said, figure on nine pounds of mash to raise a three-pound broiler. But poultrymen can cut expensive feed costs for raising broiler chicks by using good birds, good feed from the beginning and proper management, the recent feed trials showed.

8 Kinds Used
Eight kinds of chickens were used to give a cross section of commercial broilers. Dr. Parker said that he believed any lot of good chicks would do as well as his supervised flock did with good feed and proper management.

The test also showed that the breed of chickens is not as important as the strain. The second fastest growing pen of broilers, and the slowest growing were New Hampshires of different strains. Each pen contained 250 birds. A pen of Cornish New Hampshire cross showed the best gain, reaching three pounds in 62 days on only 7.8 pounds of feed each.

Famed General Meets Salem Cannery

World domination remains the aim of Communism and any truce approved by the Russians in Korea would comprise largely a move to ally Western fears and prevent formation of a European army, Gen. Lucius Clay said Monday.

The general, formerly high commissioner for Western Germany and now chairman of the board of Continental Can Company, was in Salem to meet with two-score valley food processors at lunch, at the Senator Hotel. His company plane flew him to Walla Walla last night.

Sees No Recession

Gen. Clay, whose comments on the international situation came during a press conference preceding the luncheon, told the processors that his company "is confident there is no recession" and "we intend to continue to expand." He made no definite commitments, but did not rule out Salem as a possible point for future development.

Accompanying him were Sherlock McKewen of San Francisco, Pacific Coast vice president of Continental Can; W. M. Blinn, San Francisco, division manager; W. W. Hodgson, Seattle, northwest district manager; George Van Kleek, Portland plant manager, and J. J. Harris, Portland sales representative. Among those greeting him were Supreme Court Justice James T. Brand, who presided at the Nuremberg, Germany, war crime trials.

Revolt Could Spread

Speaking in answer to questions, General Clay said he believed the revolt in Germany could well spread to other satellites, and that because of Russian force could quell them "the Soviets will lose whatever goodwill they had with the workers whose friend they pretend to be." He said Russia next would probably work for a neutral Germany, requiring the withdrawal of all troops.

Hopes for European Army

Gen. Clay said he saw "a very real hope" for a European army, "which to be effective must have Western German participation," although "Europe is prone to take any Russian (peace) move as a change in basic purpose." But Americans are more realistic. Soviet motives have not changed.

Vista Variety Store Postal Site Protested

A petition carrying 284 names was telegraphed to the U. S. postmaster general Monday protesting the awarding of a postal contract station to the Vista Variety Store.

The petition said signers understood that the low bidders for the station were Neale V. and Mary L. Chaney, doing business as Dickson's Market, and that they "urgently request you to investigate." The petition was telegraphed by Neale V. Chaney. Copies also were sent to Oregon's two senators and four representatives.

Vista Variety took over the contract station April 1, 1952. It was re-awarded the contract July 1 of this year. Salem Postmaster Albert Gragg said all bids were sent directly to the postmaster general and that the awarding was made from that office.

New Quarters For Welfare Bureau Sought

A new home for the Marion County Welfare Department, now housed in the Salem School Administration office building on North Church Street, was discussed at a meeting of the Welfare Commission Monday.

The sprawling department will have to move soon when the old high school building is torn down to make way for construction of a local Meier and Frank store.

"Our department will need about 5,000 square feet of floor space," said Administrator Kenneth Peterson.

No space has been provided for the welfare department in the new Marion County courthouse now under construction. Welfare housing is more complicated than other county offices, Peterson said, because it is financed by federal, state and county funds.

Only about half of Oregon's counties, he said, house welfare departments in their courthouses. The commission's discussion Monday, he said, only concerned tentative plans for renting new space or for acquiring a new building. The commission expects to take up the matter again in a meeting soon.

Transient Worker Pleads Innocent To Assault Count

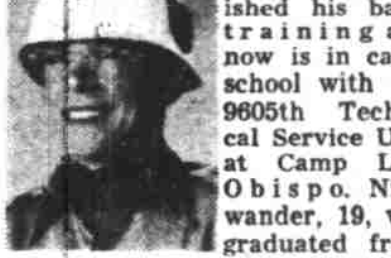

Lando Barton Williams, transient fruit worker from Stockton, Calif., pleaded innocent in Marion County District Court Monday to a charge of assault with intent to commit rape.

His case was continued to Friday for preliminary hearing. He is held in lieu of $3,500 bail.

Williams was booked by state police Sunday and held on a five-year-old daughter of two other fruit pickers at a Central Howell orchard.

Abortion Verdict Appeal Date Reset By Supreme Court

Rearguments in the case of Dr. George H. Buck, Portland, under five years penitentiary sentence for manslaughter by abortion have been set by the State Supreme Court here for Sept. 10.

The rearguments originally were fixed for early in June but were postponed because of the illness of the defendant's attorney. Buck was convicted in the Multnomah County Circuit Court and later appealed to the Supreme Court.
