Privately-Owned Dump Still Open To Garbage Cans

Salem residents can still leave their debris at the so-called city dump in the Macleay area so long as they have no more than one can-full, William Schlitt of Sanitary Service Company said Tuesday.

A fee will be charged for dumping larger amounts. The dump is in charge of a custodian.

The question of dumping fees arose in connection with this week's city council action in approving increased charges for garbage collection.

The city dump of 22 acres is owned by the Sanitary Service Company, not by the city.

Whole Blood Plate Test for Chicks Okehed

Oregon's department of agriculture has agreed to recognize the whole blood plate test for pullorum clean rating of baby chicks, Earl Reitsuma, supervisor of the Oregon Poultry Improvement plan for the department, said Tuesday.

This new test must be performed by agents authorized by the department and the flocks will be subject to a check test by inspectors from Reitsuma's office.

The new type of test complies with the minimum requirements for the National Poultry Improvement Plan. It will not supplant the tube test for pullorum clean rating, but will be an operational method of test for this same rating.

Reitsuma says the incidence of pullorum in baby chicks tested in Oregon this season was a small fraction of one per cent, which is far below the national average which approximated one-half of one per cent.

Dry Cleaning Costs to Rise 10 Per Cent

Dry cleaning prices in Salem are scheduled to rise an average of about 10 per cent, it was decided in a reorganizational meeting Monday night of the Salem Association of Dry Cleaners.

The rise in prices was blamed on increases in production costs.

Election of officers in the Monday evening meeting at the Senator Hotel, included selection of Robert Seamster as president; Charles Sweistris, vice-president; Lois Keeney, secretary-treasurer, and Clayton Foreman and Darryl Donaldson to the board of directors. The Association plans a monthly meeting with a board meeting a day or two each scheduled meet.

All seats and reserved and will be available at the Capitol Theater next week.

Suit Alleges Fraud in Use Of Firm Funds

A suit seeking an accounting of funds allegedly "misappropriated" from the Beaver Plywood Cooperative, 670 Mullock Ave., was filed in Marion County Circuit Court Tuesday.

The complaint was filed by member W. W. Lock against four named members of the cooperative and 14 unidentified members. All are Salem residents.

Lock alleges in the complaint that Donald A. Heinz, Earl G. Potter, Delbert Folk and Harold McNamany were original members of the cooperative and paid membership fees of $3,000 each. So did Lock.

Later, the complaint says, the four defendants met and voted to reduce membership fees to $1,000 per member. Lock then alleges that many new members were signed up.

It is further alleged that the four defendants "fraudulently misappropriated" funds of the cooperative by "paying those funds to themselves as dividends or refunds on membership fees they had previously paid."

The complaint seeks an accounting of the funds and asks that the defendants reimburse the cooperative.

Bigger Loans Attract Vets

The state veterans department's loan business has increased 400 per cent because of the bigger loans which were effective a week ago.

The department said that during the past week, it has received 215 applications from veterans to borrow money for purchase of farms and homes.

The maximum loan, which had been $6,000 for both farms and homes, was boosted to $15,000 for farms, and $9,000 for homes.

The loans can be made up to 75 per cent of appraised value. They are made to veterans of World War II and the Korean War.
