Eating Our Way

Four Dining Days in City Yield Inspiration for Many Food Stores

By MAXINE BUREN
Statesman Woman's Editor

Back into the harness, full of culture and victuals. A week of vacation spent in San Francisco was definitely civilized, as against our first week camping in the wilds of Canada.

Though the objective three nights of the opera, we also enjoyed eating out, with a taste for the unusual. And certainly San Francisco is the place to find just that. Armed with lots of advice from friends, lists of the best places to dine and a will to eat our way through four days stay in the city, we found that sometimes the more exotic places, besides providing atmosphere, also give the most for the money. Tarantino's famous dining spot at Fisherman's Wharf lived up to its name as an interesting place to lunch. One of us selected Finnen Gaddie with parsley butter and boiled potatoes and the other crab a la Newburgh. Neither was unusual, but the flavor was excellent and the view of colorful fishing fleet made dining there a pleasant experience.

ITALIAN FOOD

That night we ate at Solaris, an Italian spot in picturesque Maden Lane. Chicken Tetrazini included spaghetti and breast of chicken with mushrooms in cream sauce. Spaghetti Polpetti was meat balls with spaghetti in cheese and tomato sauce with noodles of parsley sprinkled on top.

HOT STUFF

The Papagaya room at the Fairmont provided more interest. One is given a choice of spicy food by pretty Mexican and not-so-Mexican girls. Our meals were tamales with appropriate sauce, and frijoles with a hot sauce. Both were served a mashed bean dish of interesting flavor and enchiladas with butter. The latter is a thin corn cake which is buttered, rolled and eaten with the hands.

Favorites of both was El Prado at the Plaza hotel, gathering place of business folk at noon, and a place where you get excellent food. Luncheon for one was shish kebabs (which the waiter assured us was the best in town), and rice. For the other, turbot and crab with gnocci, a specialty of the house. The latter for which we will give a recipe at a later date, are small balls of dough very much like eclair paste, cooked in water and served with the creamed fish.

El Prado suited so well that we went back another day for dinner. Menus for the two included chicken saute with cream sauce seasoned with juniper berries and served with wild rice Polonaise. This was served from a cart featuring blushing copper dish covers and chauffeured by a high-capped chef. The other menu was heart of romaine, avocado, crab legs, lobster and anchovies. Both had French pastry from the elegant array on a cart.

So back we came, a couple of wiser and fuller women ready for another 12 months of home cooking with at least one spice on the calorie chart.

Knox, guardian, all of Bethel 23; Miss Nancy Owens, honored queen; Miss Ann Berger, senior princess; and Mrs. Arthur Woods, past guardian of Bethel 43; Miss Barbara Anderson, honored queen; Miss Francis Burris, junior princess; Mrs. Paul Riffey, guardian; and Lowell Shinn, associate guardian of Bethel 48.

Honored Queen Barbara Cone announced a covered dish dinner will be held at the next meeting in honor of the Bethel fathers. Thirty-five girls attended the weekend trip to the beach by chartered bus.

Following the meeting a program was presented for the entertainment of the guests.

Idaho PUC Opposes Hells Canyon Plan

By JOHN KAMPS
WASHINGTON (AP)—A letter from the Idaho Public Utilities Commission favoring the Idaho Power Co. plan to build three dams in the Snake River, went into the record at the Hells Canyon hearing Tuesday over vigorous objections by a public power attorney.

Mrs. Evelyn Cooper, representing groups which favor a federal dam in the river between Idaho and Oregon, said the letter "parallels so closely the arguments of the Idaho Power Company that it may not have been prepared without the help of the company."

The letter, Mrs. Cooper said at a Power Commission hearing on Idaho Power's dam construction license applications, "is patently objectionable. It is full of generalities and conclusions not verified by evidence of the commission's authority or competence to make such statements. . . conclusions that cover the whole waterfront here."

Beyond Bounds
Mrs. Cooper added: "On the basis of my own experience with such state bodies, the commission in Idaho has gone way beyond its bounds."

Urging admission of the letter and defending the state commission, R. P. Parry, Idaho Power lawyer said: "I think it is a sad state of affairs that public officials are charged with wrong doings because their opinions happen to coincide with the applicant's. I object strenuously to any implication of wrong doing."

Parry said the Idaho commission is vitally interested in the production of power in the state and added:

"It is a strange and startling state of affairs when someone two thousand miles away can criticize a state body for doing something it is obligated to do."

Admits Letter
Hearing examiner William J. Costello admitted the letter as a statement of the Idaho commission's position, saying similar statements had been received from groups favoring the federal Hells Canyon project and that none will be considered as evidence.

Costello said the letter was a reply to an invitation for comment sent by the Power Commission to governors and state regulatory bodies in the Columbia River Basin.

The letter said Idaho Power needs additional power plants and its cost estimates for the proposed projects are "reasonably adequate and sufficient."

Benson Denies Election Loss Due to Farm Policy Dispute

NEW YORK (AP)—Agriculture Secretary Ezra Taft Benson says he "certainly" disagrees that a recent Democratic victory in a Wisconsin congressional district stemmed from lack of confidence in administration farm policies.

The 9th Congressional District a week ago elected Lester R. Johnson as the first Democrat ever to represent it. The loser, Republican Arthur Padrut said afterwards:

"The results show very clearly that the farmer and the laboring man do not like the present administration's policies x x x."

Benson, in an interview with Ernest K. Lindley in Newsweek magazine, indicated he had no intention of resigning, despite some of the proposed Hells Canyon project would be "excessive and uneconomic" and the Pacific Northwest cannot "wait seven to ten years" for such a dam when Idaho Power could complete its project in a few years.

The commission added it "is not interested in or concerned with the ideologies and politics of the Hells Canyon-Oxbow controversy" but it "is vitally concerned with . . . necessary supply of power by the electric utilities under its jurisdiction and regulation to the people of the state of Idaho and the installation by said utilities of adequate generating facilities."

John Mason, commission attorney, completed his three-day cross-examination of Robert A. Hogg, Idaho Power engineer. Mrs. Cooper will begin questioning the witness Wednesday.

Question of Estimate
Mason's questions Tuesday dealt with the basis for Hogg's estimate that the federal Hells Canyon proposal would cost more than 429 million dollars, compared with the company's estimate of 133 million dollars for its three dams.

Hogg said the Reclamation Bureau estimated in 1951 the federal project could be built for 357 million. He said his estimate includes increases of 40 million for higher construction costs and 32 million for interest during construction.

Asked to compare annual operator and maintenance estimates for the federal and private consumption, Hogg said his Hells Canyon estimate is $1,322,000 compared with $400,000 for Idaho Power.
