Schoolwork Goes on Despite Tangles With Tuberculosis

By JAMES BURR MILLER Staff Writer, The Statesman

But that's only one phase of education in connection with tuberculosis, as instruction outside the hospital is considered a continuing need so the citizens will be aware of signs of the disease.

Two classroom-type teachers were kept busy on the TB Hospital staff-Mrs. A. B. Swigart and Mrs. Ruth Hamilton. One of Mrs. Swigart's charges at the hospital is Sharon Moore (pictured above), 11, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Moore, Silverton. The girl came to the hospital last June and is continuing her work as a sixth-grader in school. She was a pupil at Macleay prior to her admittance for treatment.

Besides studying which she likes, she is interested in crocheting. The young girl's attitude at the hospital is described as admirable.

One of the educational methods outside the hospital corridors lies in the field of methodical X-ray checkups. The Marion County Tuberculosis and Health Association, during their current Christmas Seal program, reported that three times as much TB is located in routine hospital chest X-rays as in any other method.

"Of course the mobile unit finds a large number as well." explained Mrs. Ruby Bunnell, local tuberculosis association executive.

To promote these routine X-ray checkups of regular city hospital patients, a committee from the county association has been assigned to study the possibility of establishing regular X-ray checkups at the new Salem General Hospital. Salem Memorial already has such an attachment on their equipment and have, since last July, been taking chest X-rays of 56 Already their patients at $2 each.

The new attachment for X-ray The new attachment for X-ray equipment costs about $5,000. Irwin Wedel, business manager at Salem Memorial, explained that their hospital was fortunate in getting a war surplus attachment Adult Classes for considerably less than the new price. "The unit has worked out beautifully," he said.

The current population of young folks at the state TB Hospital is not so alarming as it has explain that this is because a number of youngsters are now sent to Doernbecher Hospital at Dec. 4, totaled over 600. Officials at the Tuberculosis Hospital do explain, however, that the recently opened wing of 65 beds was filled long before it was completed from their current waiting list.

"Education of the public before tuberculosis strikes would mean young people like Sharon Moore might pursue their studies away from hospital rooms," Mrs. Bunnell explained. "And methodical X-ray checkups may well be an answer.
