Doubt Cast on Snake River Irrigation Data

WASHINGTON (AP)—The accuracy of an engineer's estimate of how much Snake River water will be required for future irrigation in Idaho was questioned by opposing attorneys at the Hells Canyon hearing Tuesday.

Lawyers cross-examined Milton S. Sachs, Bonneville Power Administration water utilities expert, at the Power Commission hearing on applications by Idaho Power Co. to build three dams in the river between Idaho and Oregon, where the federal Hells Canyon project also has been proposed.

Sachs, of Portland, Ore., said his studies of potential depletion in the Snake River show irrigators would not take a "significant" amount of water and there would be plenty left for power generation.

R. P. Parry, Idaho Power attorney, asked Sachs to define his use of the word "significant." Sachs said the depletion possibly would be "one to five per cent."

Parry questioned whether Sachs obtained enough information from precipitation stations to make an accurate estimate. The lawyer said Sachs got data from only one station above an elevation of 6,000 feet where snow is deep — and had no measurements from major Snake River tributaries including the Wier, Owyhee and Payette rivers.

Sachs said his measurements were obtained from 10 representative stations and he didn't need accurate estimate. The lawyer data from tributaries which make small water contributions to the Snake River in dry years.

Idaho Power engineers have testified that irrigation would take so much water that the proposed federal Hells Canyon reservoir couldn't be filled annually.

Sachs said his report was based partly on estimates of irrigation expansion made by a task force of the Columbia Basin Interagency Committee. He said he helped to write the task force's report as co-chairman.

Sachs said the task force estimated 734,000 acres of Idaho land along the Snake River would be placed under irrigation during the 50-year payout period of the proposed federal Hells Canyon Dam. This estimate is much lower than Idaho Power's.

Lucien Milmer, attorney for groups advocating the federal dam, asked if Sachs believed the 192,000-acre Mountain Home project, which was included in the Columbia Basin committee estimate, would be constructed in the next 50 years.

Sachs said he doubted it would. But he said his estimate still is may be completed ahead of schedule, because other projects use and irrigation by pumping may exceed expectations.

Moslem Court Gives Divorce To Narriman

CAIRO, Egypt (AP)—A Moslem religious court granted a divorce Tuesday to former Queen Narriman and the sultry-eyed beauty joyously exclaimed "it's great to be Miss Narriman Sadeh again!"

The action of the religious court ended a teen-age marriage with fat and frivolous King Farouk that had flourished amidst the glamor of palaces but faded in the smoke-filled hot spots of royal exile.

Narriman renounced custody of her son Ahmed Fuad, who was 2 years old last month. She dropped demands for monthly alimony payments equal to $14,400 and a dowry allowance of $28,800. She will try to get the money from assets of Farouk confiscated by Egypt's new regime, but her chances were regarded as doubtful at best.

Narriman had charged Farouk with adultery, maltreatment, mental cruelty and estrangement. No details were aired in the court room.

Neither Narriman nor Farouk was present in the packed courtroom in suburban Heliopolis for the end of the marriage that on May 6, 1951, had climaxed a three day celebration in all of Egypt.

Five-Alarm Fire in Boston Warehouse

BOSTON—This is general view of a five-alarm fire in a furniture warehouse in Boston's Haymarket Square district as firemen battle to control the blaze as the thermometer hovered around 16 degrees. Fanned by brisk winds, the blaze spread to two adjacent buildings. The warehouse was a total loss, while damage to other buildings was heavy. (AP Wirephoto to The Statesman.)

Eighth Year of Indochina War Sees No Big Gain by Either Side

HANOI, Indochina (AP)—The winter campaign in this eighth year of the Indochinese war has reached the halfway mark with no major victories by either the French Union or Red-led Vietnam and no decisive battle in prospect.

Whether a showdown fight will come before the monsoon rains start in April is anyone's guess.

Strong French forces are still hoping an estimated 40,000 Vietminh troops entrenched in hill positions around Dien Bien Phu will try a frontal attack upon that heavily armed Union fortress in the Thai country of Northwestern Indochina.

"Dust Bowl" Dien Bien Phu is a "dust bowl" six miles long and four miles wide. French paratroopers seized it Nov. 20. The French subsequently built up a powerful defense position by airlift to keep the Vietminh from occupying all the Thai country. The French also wanted to block a route for a possible fresh rebel invasion of Laos.

But the French have been waiting 72 days for the Vietminh assault, which may never come. The Vietminh may simply put in harassing attacks to neutralize the French post, then shift around and thrust into Northern Laos in the direction of the royal Laotian capital of Luang Prabang, 120 miles southward.

While the French wait hopefully for a Vietminh assault on Dien Bien Phu, Union artillery and planes continue to hammer the rebels in the hills around that fortress. The French say they have inflicted "heavy" casualties.

In Northern Laos, French-Laoian forces are skirmishing daily with regional Vietminh units and seizing hundreds of tons of rice and war supplies. However, there has been no major fighting in the Muong Khoua area 87 miles north of Luang Prabang. The Vietminh held onto a slice of Northern Laos when they quit their first invasion of the little mountain kingdom last April.

Bombers Pound Vietminh In Central Laos — scene of the Vietminh Christmas invasion — French bombers have been pounding Vietminh troops who cut across the narrow waist of Laos to Thakhek the French restored river and road communications between Central and Northern Laos.

The Vietminh are estimated to have lost up to 4,000 killed, wounded and captured in fighting in Central Laos but they display a remarkable facility in making up losses. They simply raid villages in Viet Nam and force young Vietnamese into the rebel army.

Meanwhile, to the southeast the French offensive along the coast of Annam is progressing slowly because of heavily mined areas but there is little opposition by the rebels.

The push is moving steadily northward from Tuy Hoa, 250 miles northeast of Saigon. Its aim is to sweep 300 miles up the coast and liberate three million Vietnamese who have been under Vietminh rule since the start of the war.

To the north in the sprawling Red River Delta of Northern Indochina — key French defense bastion against the sweep of Communist forces into Southeast Asia — the fighting goes on daily and unrelentingly.

The Vietminh are stepping up their ambushes of French troops and their attacks upon the thinly manned defense posts. The rebel raids on Vietnamese villages are more frequent.

Suit Against Ex-Mate Filed By Mrs. Rilea

Mrs. Marion A. Rilea filed suit against her former husband, Thomas E. Rilea, Monday with the Marion County clerk's office in which she seeks legal assurance that premiums on a $10,000 life insurance policy will be paid.

Mrs. Rilea also seeks to enforce a property settlement and $100 monthly alimony entered into July 19, 1945, shortly after their divorce.

The plaintiff, who is named beneficiary in the $10,000 policy, claims that the required alimony payments were made up to and including last Nov. 10, but now, according to the complaint, the defendant contends he is not morally or legally obligated to pay any further alimony.

Conditioning Did It

DALLAS, Tex. (AP)—It was a typical Golden Gloves start. The youngster came out of his corner like a tiger, went after his opponent like mad—and in 20 seconds was flat on the canvas, knocked out.

Alvin Herold, who had been helping the amateur fighters in and out of the ring, took the lad back to his dressing room.

"How do you feel, son?" he asked the still-dazed boy.

"Well," said the boy, "I ain't winded."

Farm Support Conferees in Disagreement

WASHINGTON (AP)—Senate and House conferees broke up in angry disagreement Tuesday night over a bill designed to continue financing of farm price support operations.

The House version of the measure allowed $741,548,788 to the Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC) but the Senate slashed this Monday to $245,900,917.

The bill reimburses CCC for losses it has suffered, mainly in price support operations. The Senate contended the agency has not proved all the losses it claimed in the measure.

Sen. Bridges (R-NH), head of the Senate conferees, told newsmen "the House was adamant in its position and we're standing pat."

The conferees did not even try to set a time for another meeting. "We're not in any hurry," Bridges said.

However, Howard Gordon, head of the CCC who was waiting outside the conference room with his aides, told reporters his agency would be able to get along for a few weeks.

Trial Date of Malheur County Clerk Reset

VALE, Ore. (AP)—A new date has been set for the trial of Harry Sackett, Malheur County clerk accused of missing county funds. It will start March 8.

It will be the second trial. In the first, held last October, the jury failed to agree.

ARMY WORRIES SWEDES

STOCKHOLM, (AP)—Neutral Sweden, whose soldiers have not fired a shot in anger for more than 100 years, is worried about a shortage of suitable officers for its army. "The brainy chaps are keeping out" is the gist of a special report just issued. "The (armed) forces are facing a serious crisis in intellectual quality."

POLICE PROBLEM SOLVED

PASADENA, Calif. (AP)—Police investigated a driver for scraping a building and not having a driver's license. The truck was the property of the police department, the gouged building was police headquarters, and the driver, a jail trusty, was moving the truck under police orders.

McCarthy's Charge Said Unsupported

WASHINGTON (AP)—The State Department announced Tuesday night that a three-month investigation had failed to support a charge by Sen. McCarthy (R-Wis.) that State Department personnel shook down a foreign government for $150,000.

The department said its investigative authority did not extend far enough to determine "whether or not a bribe was solicited by other American citizens."

McCarthy made the charge last July 13, saying he had evidence employees "in the old Acheson State Department got the money from a friendly government in return for a legal service which he said it was entitled to receive without paying any bribes."

Some six weeks later, however, he told reporters "all evidence indicates there was a solicitation by State Department officials," but no certainty that any money actually changed hands.

At no time has McCarthy named either the foreign government nor any State Department officials he said were involved.
