Salem High in Proportion of Heart Failures

NEW YORK—Of special interest because of National Heart Month, statistics now being released by the U. S. government show that heart disease, our nation's leading health menace, is responsible for a larger proportion of the deaths in Salem, Ore., than in most other sections of the United States.

The data, contained in the first nation-wide report on vital statistics since 1949, was gathered during the last census and is being published in three volumes by the U. S. Public Health Service.

Larger Percentage
It shows, for Salem, a heart disease toll for the year of 276, equivalent to 59.2 per cent of all local deaths.

This was a larger proportion than was found generally in the United States, where heart ailments accounted for 52.8 per cent of all deaths. It was greater also than the heart mortality in the Pacific states, 53.7 per cent. Included in the figures are the 20 different forms of heart disease which, together, strike down about 775,000 men, women and children annually. This is more than the combined toll of cancer plus all other diseases and all accidents.

Work Loss Totalled
In addition, points out the American Heart Association, there are some 10,000,000 of our people who are partially or wholly disabled because of heart ailments. They represent an annual loss of 176 million work days and a resultant loss of productivity estimated at $2.1 billion.

The 276 heart deaths in Salem in the year were equal to a rate of 640 deaths per 100,000 population. This was more than the rate for the nation as a whole, 507 per 100,000. It was also higher than the Pacific States rate, 502 heart deaths per 100,000.

About 5,800,000 square miles, or about 10.2 per cent of the earth's land area are covered with glacial ice.
