French Hairdos Fail to Turn the Heads Of U.S. Girls, Italian Haircut the Rage

By VIVIAN BROWN

AP Newsfeatures Beauty Editor Will the new Paris hairdos go to the heads of American girls? Probably not-for these reasons: (1) The French seldom have paced women who are bored with their casual boy cuts. As usual French hair styles, even when they im itate an American trend, are more set in pattern, classical in contour and chic in styling. They are more formal in every way than their American counterpats.

American hairstyles and (2) the Italian haircut is still enjoying ragpopularity here. But the new Parisienne styles should appeal to some American Wayne Frederickson of Sandy: ing popularity here.

The new spring crop of Paris coiffures is feminine and ladylike. A curl is a real honesty-togoodness ringlet set smack to the head. A trio of ringlets can scallop a forehead in studied charm. A wispy lock or two gives a girl a gaminish appearance that has its own aura of elegance.

If the preference is for the Italian boy cut or the Italian curl cut, either style may serve as a basic one for a number of interesting variations, providing the hair is at the proper length for easy manageability. This applies to the new French coifs or any American casual hairstyle.

There is no doubt that the average older woman looks better in ried a lace handkerchief which the popular shorter, curlier hair- her great-grandmother had made. dos. As one man put it recently: 'he Italian hair st, 1: certainly
