

Dairymen Object to 'Fol-de-Rols' Adding To Production Cost

By LILLIE L. MADSEN
Farm Editor, The Statesman

Opposing nothing that "added to the ultimate sanitation of milk," dairymen, at a Wednesday milk hearing, said they did oppose "fol-de-rols" which "add only to the expense of production, making the profit margin smaller for the dairyman and the product more costly to the consumer."

The hearing, held at the state capitol on proposed regulations under two Oregon milk laws brought out real areas of disagreement in only two proposals advanced by the state department of agriculture, which called the hearing. These dealt with direct sale or delivery of raw milk in the milkhouse on the farm, and bottling and capping operations.

"We're getting many of our customers on our clean milk parlors; people who haven't drunk milk for years are drinking milk now and we think it's a good thing for the industry for consumers to see for themselves how milk is produced," Mrs. Marlin Fox, Molalla, declared in disagreeing with the department's proposal to prohibit direct sale, distribution or delivery of raw milk to consumer in the milkhouse.

Elmer Deetz, Canby dairyman engaged in a jug operation, also objected to this proposal. "Consumers are just as welcome in my barn as anywhere on the premises," he declared. He said the 30-gallon operator could not afford to make changes that the proposed regulations would require.

R. L. Wyant of Ashland, and C. E. Finnegan of Oregon City, both urged the matter of keeping the public out of the milkhouse during milk handling hours, be taken care of by "no admission" signs on the milkhouse doors.

"We don't even let members of our family come into the milkhouse during this time," Finnegan declared. Finnegan said he had no objection to the proposed new regulations which provided for a separate "selling" house on the farm.

Requirement of a mechanical capper for bottling, which the department of agriculture proposes for all containers of grade B raw milk, including gallon jugs, brought out considerable opposition.

"If this is a matter of sanitation and public health, I'd like to know if people around the cap printing office are under health inspection? If we feel that manual milk capping is unsanitary, then let's start at the beginning with the making of the milk caps," Mrs. Fox said. Her husband added "that all the mechanical cappers in the world won't make milk better if we don't stay within the bacteria count, and we have stayed within the count or we wouldn't be in business now."

About 50 persons, including dairymen from Hood River and Portland south to Ashland, attended the hearing, conducted by O. K. Beals and Kenneth E. Carl, chief and assistant, of the division of foods and dairies.

Carl said the department would consider further comments from persons at the hearing for another week or 10 days, and that the department would consider the matters brought out at the hearing soon, in the hope of drawing up the new regulations within the next 30 days.

4-H to Open Garden Project

A garden tractor demonstration and a radio broadcast are part of the activities that will signal the opening of a new 4-H club vegetable gardening project in West Salem.

City club agent, Jim Bishop, announced Wednesday that several West Salem boys will begin their gardens next Saturday on the plot surrounding the KSLM transmitter and the ground is available to any 4-H member in Salem.

The boys will gather at the garden at 11 o'clock Saturday morning and at 12:30 noon will take part in the first weekly 4-H club radio program. Part of the broadcast will be done from the garden itself.

This program is to become a valley-wide 4-H radio program to which all 4-H club members in Marion, Polk, and Yamhill counties are invited to take part.

Lawyer Given Permanent Disbarment

John P. Ronchetto, Portland attorney, Wednesday was permanently disbarred from practicing law in Oregon by order of the State Supreme Court.

The disbarment was recommended by the state board of governors of the state bar. Ronchetto was accused of professional misconduct.

In another order the Supreme Court ordered the suspension of Robert J. Creamer, Portland attorney, from practicing law in Oregon until he has sufficiently recovered from a mental disorder to justify him again accepting the obligations and duties of an attorney.

Creamer's suspension also was recommended by the board of governors of the state bar. His hearing before the board of governors involved personal misconduct.

Area Military Units to Join in Parade Here

Military units from Albany, McMinnville, Dallas, Silverton and Woodburn will join Salem units here this evening in the Armed Forces Day parade which will conclude the annual observation.

The day's activity will get underway at 11:55 a.m. when a guard of honor along with civic and military leaders meet at McNary Field to welcome Lt. Gen. Willard G. Wyman, commanding general of the Sixth Army, who is slated as principal speaker at the noon luncheon.

Locks Plans Welcome
At the luncheon Mayor Alfred Locks will welcome the group and introduce General Wyman, Gov. Paul L. Patterson, Col. A. E. McKinney, chief of the Oregon Military District, and Thomas E.
