Navy Facility May Receive More Planes

Possibility that more aircraft may be assigned to Salem's Naval Air Facility was made known Monday during an unofficial visit there by three officers from Naval Air Reserve Training Headquarters, Glenview, Ill.

The three, Capt. F. K. Upham, Cmdr. G. C. Gould and Cmdr. F. L. Fitey, came to Salem Monday from Seattle where they inspected the Naval Air Station.

Cmdr. Gould expressed satisfaction over the Salem station's "economical and efficient" operation and indicated he will attempt to increase the number of airplanes assigned to the unit.

Naval reservists here now have nine planes, according to Lt. Cmdr. James L. Thornton, commanding officer of the facility. They include five torpedo bombers, three single-engine trainers and one twin-engine light cargo craft.

If more aircraft are added to the fleet, Cmdr. Thornton said, they will be of the same type as those now on the station. Possibility of jets being assigned to Salem are remote, he explained, because of short runways and inadequate plane parking facilities. Most jet planes require more than 5,000 feet of runway, especially in hot weather, he pointed out.

Monday the second summer cruise started at the Salem station when 18 officers and nine enlisted men of Squadron AAU 892 arrived for the 14-day training period. Squadron commander is Lt. Cmdr. Don Hartwig, Portland.

$315 in Fines Meted Out to Young Driver

Eighteen-year-old Stephen Jasper Custor, 1615 N. 22nd St., was fined a total of $315 in municipal court Monday for traffic violations and he was committed in lieu of payment.

The charges against the youth evolved following a police chase Saturday morning and crash of Custor's car into a tree at North Capitol and Gaines Streets.

A 13-year-old companion, who was driving at the time of the crash, was cited to court, but did not appear Monday. Police reports indicate that Custor was driving the vehicle when the chase began.

Custor was fined $250 for driving a motor vehicle while privilege to drive was indefinitely suspended; $50 for reckless driving, and $15 for permitting illegal driving.
