PORTLAND A - Senator Wayne Morse of Oregon said in a television and state-wide radio broad-A chicken, the Rhode Island cast Friday night that the Eisenhower administration was "playing fast and loose with plans for comprehensive development" of Pacific Northwest hydroelectric potential

The administration, he said, is undercutting the Northwest power pool and the region's integrated system of power and flood control.

The "partnership" power policy of Interior Secretary Douglas- Mc-Kay might result in Oregon getting less electric power from future dams, Morse said.

Discussing a bill introduced this week by Sen. Guy Cordon (R-Ore) which would permit 'partnership" construction of John Day Dam on the Columbia River by the federal government and public and private power agencies, Morse said: "If groups in Oregon seek to appropriate power generated in our state with first call upon it for users in our state, we will only encourage and provide excuses to those who advocate similar action in the of Washington. That state is way ahead of us in power development and has a greater power potential If we permit ourselves to get into that kind of competition, we will lose.

Under this partnership construction program. Morse said, flood control features of the proposed! dam might be reduced. "The reduction of John Day flood control would increase the portion of the costs chargeable to power... The the utilities would pay 50 per cent. WASHINGTON (# - Rep. Nor-blad (R-Ore) is seeking to have 75 government jobs transferred from Seattle to Portland, Ore.

Affected by his suggestion, made in a letter to Postmaster General Summerfield, would be employes of the postal inspection service in Seattle.

The congressman told Summerfield that inasmuch as the department plans to locate its regional neadquarters in Portland "it would seem only proper to me from the standpoint of governmental · economy and cohesive centralized efficient operations that the postal nspection service should also be moved to that city."
