(Editor's note: For more than a year Mau Mau terrorists have stalked the rich British East African colony of Kenya. The Mau Mau hunt and murders, both black and whites. The British are working toward a long-range solution, but it will take time. In the meantime, here's an intimate glimpse of how British justice is meeting terror in Kenya.)

Geddes Says Solons Should Check Budget Administration

The State Legislature has a dual responsibility—including adoption of biennial budgets and seeing that the administration of such budgets is fair and adequate—State Sen. Paul Geddes, Roseburg, told a large group gathered at the Public Service Forum Conference here Saturday.

Warne H. Nunn, assistant public utilities commissioner, presided, and introduced the speaker.

Most of the forenoon was devoted to budgeting problems. Geddes said there had been a tendency on the part of too many Legislators to compile and adopt a budget based on the actual money available.

One of the outstanding budget problems, Geddes continued, is whether the legislative tax committee should wait on the legislative ways and means committee to reports its needs or whether the ways and means committee should wait until the tax program is approved before making its appropriations.

Geddes said no government can be successful without cooperation between the executive, judicial and legislative branches. He said it was easy for state department and institution heads to appear before the State Emergency Board and request funds when their appropriations are depleted.

"Such requests should have adequate consideration," Geddes declared. He urged that budget facts be placed on the table and that financial requests be based on actual requirements.

P. W. Schneider, director, Oregon State Game Commission, discussed departmental budgets and how they are set up and should be administered.

Bower Explains
The theory of budgeting and operation on both the federal and state basis was explained by Floyd Bower, Salem public accountant. The practice, in some cases, of creating budget financial reserves instead of using such reserves to reduce tax levies, was questioned by Attorney General Robert Y. Thornton.

He suggested that annual rather than biennial budgets might be an improvement over the current system.

He was one of 14—thirty ages ranging from 24 to 37—banged between 8 p.m. and 5:30 a.m. that night after being duly tried before justices of the Kenya Supreme Court.

300 Executed
Since Mau Mau erupted in October, 1952 a total of 300 Kenya blacks have been executed in this fashion. They die for illegal possession of firearms or ammunition, for murder, for conspiring with unlawfully armed persons, or for taking part in Mau Mau oath ceremonies.

The Mau Mau ritual includes bestiality, cannibalism, such acts as picking out a dead person's eyes and drinking the fluid from the sockets.

Mau Mau have killed close to 1,000 Africans, more than 20 Europeans and more than 20 Asians. Crown forces are steadily making inroads in the ranks of the fanatics, killing about 200 and capturing about 50 every month. Yet still the Mau Mau bathe Kenya in blood, raiding remote ranches and settlements.

Used as Workers
The most difficult problem of the settlers is the fact that the Mau Mau draws its membership from the Kikuyu, the tribe from which Europeans have drawn most of their farm and domestic workers. Thus Kikuyu, who by day appear to be passive workers, at night may be taking part in the ghastly raids and grim activities of Mau Mau.

The basic driving force of the Mau Mau is the claim that the land belongs to the Kikuyu—not to the whites. The strategy of the Mau Mau leaders is to establish rule by terror over all Africans in Kenya so they will obey Mau Mau rather than the government.

These are the things in the minds of the colonists when a suspected Mau Mau comes to trial. But British justice runs its slow and careful course in each case, with natives advising and watching proceedings closely.

Miano and the 13 hanged with him, had appealed their cases, but all the appeals were dismissed.

Among those hanged was Karuoya, a son of Karuoya, whom a patrol flushed out of a hut in Nganda. A companion escaped. Members of the patrol testified that Karuoya told them he was "captain Kenya" of the Mau Mau.

Police Jersey
In the hut they said they found a police-type jersey with three stars on the epaulettes and a bush shirt with an embroidered badge lettered "Kenya." They also said they found a home-made gun of pipe with a crudely carved stock and eight rounds of ammunition.

A 16-year-old girl found in the hut was released. Karuoya claimed
