Death Ends Varied Career Of Jay Reeves

Jay Edward Reeves, 68, newspaperman and former legislator and attorney, died Wednesday morning while at work as a Linotype operator at the Statesman-Journal newspaper plant.

Reeves, late resident of 1980 W. Nob Hill, had been employed at the Capital Journal since 1938. He collapsed at his machine and was treated by city first aid but died almost immediately. He had had a heart ailment for the past several years.

Born at Groton, S. D., May 25, 1886, Reeves made his home in that state until moving to California in 1924. Two years later he came to Oregon and worked at the printing trade at Coos Bay for six years.

Arlington Paper
Later he purchased the Arlington newspaper and after that owned and operated a Grants Pass weekly paper.

When he came to Salem in 1933 Reeves worked first for the Oregon Statesman, then for the state printing department before taking a position with the Journal.

Though a printer and newspaperman most of his life Reeves was elected in 1918 to the South Dakota state senate, serving there as the youngest member. He later served two terms as state auditor there. He also held a law degree from the University of Minnesota and had passed the bar in that state.

Church Elder
In Salem Reeves was a member of the Presbyterian Church and an elder in that church.

Survivors include the widow, the former Myrtis Geib to whom Reeves was married Oct. 6, 1915, at Groton, S.D.; two daughters, Mrs. Marjorie Schaff of Pocatello, Idaho, and Mrs. Joyce Beard of San Bernardino, Calif.; two sons, Robert of Salem and Gordon of Eugene, and four grandchildren.

Announcement of services will be made later by the Virgil T. Golden Chapel.

Burkland is a member of the Hi-Y group, under the leadership of Frank Washburn, that arrived at the congress Sunday. Other Salem delegates are Jim Hardie, son of Mr. and Mrs. James A. Hardie, and Julian Thruston, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Beane.

Before arriving at the convention, the Salem group motored to Washington, D.C., where they saw Secretary of the Interior Douglas McKay, and then went on to New York City.

The congress is attended by high school juniors and seniors, who have held positions of leadership in their local Hi-Y Clubs.

Under the theme "Forward Together," the delegates learn democratic procedures and study their responsibilities to society and the community.

Word of the death was brought to Salem Wednesday by L. M. McKinney, 1360 N. Church St., who was in Provo last week. He called at the Jackman home and found that Jackman had died a few hours previously.

County Court Discusses Road Problems

A discussion of the condition of Marion County roads was the only item of business in a brief meeting of the county court Wednesday. The court considered complaints that had been received but no action was taken.

A program of road oiling throughout the county will be started early in July by the county engineer's office. Approximately 15 miles of county roads will be oiled, beginning in the Quinaby area.

Commissioner E. L. Rogers had proposed that the engineer's office consider the possibility of oiling roads around Salem to a width of 20 feet, two feet wider than in the past, in an attempt to keep dust down.

Commissioner Roy J. Rice Wednesday told of driving along Claxter Rd., where trucks of a highway contractor have been accused of raising heavy dust. Rice said he found trucks not belonging to the contractor also using the road.

Farm Union to Build Office on Silverton Road

The Oregon Farmers Union Cooperative has purchased two acres on the Silverton road as the site for a new Farmers Union headquarters in Salem, Wendell Barnett of Brooks, president, announced Wednesday.

A consumers' co-op and oil station will be built there, and at a future date the state office of the Oregon Farmers Union and the insurance headquarters will probably be moved to the new site, Barnett said.

The site is at the intersection of Silverton Road and Hollywood Avenue, just west of the overpass of the new 99E pass road.

There will be a general membership meeting of co-op members and others interested Monday evening, at the Mayflower hall, Portland Road, it was announced. An oyster supper will follow the business meeting.

Barnett was elected president at a recent board meeting. He succeeds Roy Rutschman, who has resigned from the board. Other board members include Howard Snodgrass, Dever; Jack Wells, Independence; Lloyd Beutler, Warren Creech, and Ben Hall, all of Salem.

Fourth Marine Beaver Unit Being Formed

Recruiting of U. S. Marines under a plan of "Oregon platoons" has been so successful that a fourth Beaver Platoon is in the making.

This was the word Wednesday from Salem recruiters after a conference this week with Maj. W. F. Simlik, officer in charge of Marine recruiting in Oregon, who visited here Tuesday.

The new all-Oregon group to be trained as a unit will leave for San Diego July 24.

This Oregon platoon, as the three previous ones of the past year, will include a squad of Salem-area men. The squad will be dubbed "Salem Globe and Anchor Squad."

Men enlisting for this platoon now will be placed on reserve status and under orders for the July 24 departure for active duty.

Salem's recruiting area has sent 63 men into training in the three earlier platoons.

Livestock Brand Renewal Time Arrives in State

It's roundup time in Oregon for livestock brands. Every five years stockmen must apply for brand renewal and 4,000 application blanks are being prepared for mailing during July, the state department of agriculture said Wednesday.

In order to speed the process of rounding up the brands, the application blank is designed so all the stockman must do is sign his name, draw in the earmarks and return the form along with a recording fee.
